DROUGHT REDUCED STEELHEAD POPULATION

The steelhead population of the Carmel River has been hard hit since the 1976-77 drought, according to a study presented in November by fishery consultant Robert Lewis. There has not been a steelhead migration in the Carmel River since the drought and the 1977 Marble-Cone fire, Page 22.

BIG SPILL AT SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT

JANUARY 3, 1980

USING A CHAINSAW, Jack Holmgren clears a cypress tree that was downed in his father's yard at 3396 Taylor road in Hatton Fields during the Dec. 23 storm. Power outages throughout the Monterey Peninsula were caused by trees falling on lines, according to Bob Eustice, Pacific Gas and Electric Company manager for the Carmel Area. Carmel and Carmel Highlands and Monterey Peninsula Country Club were the areas hardest hit because of their exposure to winds and their heavy tree cover, Eustice said. Crews working overtime had completely restored power by Dec. 31. Eustice, who has worked for PG&E 35 years, said the windstorm was the biggest he had seen since a two-week storm in 1964. He said that a cost estimate of the damage, yet to be completed, "will be staggering company-wide." A 100-foot-tall pine felling in the yard of Elliot Roberts of Carmel Highlands, narrowly missing his home along Highway 1. An outdoor deck attached to the house was damaged by the tree. The major damage in Carmel was along heavily-wooded Tenth and Eleventh streets, Eustice said. Work crews, in fact, were called in for additional repairs on Eleventh after a second storm Sanday, Dec. 30, toppled more trees, he said. (George T.C. Smith photo)

'Living up to its name'

Dear Editor:

Once again the California Department of Fish and Game has lived up to its name: Fish and Game. In its vocabulary, wildlife does not appear to be very high on the list. Shooting the mountain lion in Big Sur this week was the most recent example.

Of course, as Game Warden Tom Pederson said, "We did it for the good of the lion population in general." As the saying goes, "With these kinds of friends, the mountain lion doesn't need any enemies." (And neither does the sea otter.)

With so few lions left, relocation of this prime female was the obvious solution.

Fish and Game should reflect on what Sitting Bull once said: "And so we extend to our neighbors, even our animal neighbors, the same right as ourselves to inhabit this land."

The mountain lion, at present, is threatened by more than game wardens. Senate Bill 835, which attempts to lift the current moratorium on mountain lion hunting, may be heard during the first week in January by the State Senate Natural Resources and Wildlife Committee.

More bloodletting.

If you want to help the beleaguered mountain lion, protest this bill by writing to Committee Chairman, John Nejedly, 1855 Olympic Blvd., Walnut Creek, CA 94596 by Jan. 4.

'It's our money, too'

Dear Editor:

They want to use $3.4 million of our tax dollars to rehabilitate Rippling River after the millions HUD claims it has already invested against private funds?

Rippling River should be run by handicapped persons—doctors and persons who know how to run a business already.

Where is low-cost housing when millions have been spent already and $3.4 million planned? For 79 people? Aw, come on!

We, the residents of Carmel Valley, spoke. We signed the petitions, we wrote letters, we have already told you—we want Rippling River as a training center for the handicapped. Hundreds — no thousands — could benefit.

Hear us, supervisors. Hear us, Congressman Panetta. We own that $3.4 million. Not HUD.

Drop parking permit plan

Dear Editor:

The Carmel Citizens Committee believes a logical solution to the upcoming Carmel City Council's vote on the preferential parking plan would be to immediately add 35 twenty-minute "green zones" spaces as recommended by the planning commission, but to defer any action, for at least one year, on the parking permit sticker portion of the plan.

If the council decides to pass both portions of the plan in January, the city won't have a clear idea a year from now what portion of the plan produced the most benefit to the city.

Since it is considerably cheaper to paint on the new 20-minute zones, as opposed to issuing and moderating the parking permit stickers, it makes more economic sense to first try the "green zones."

In January 1981, if the City Council feels that the increased number of 20-minute spaces has not helped to alleviate the parking situation, then the council should consider, as a last resort, the issuance of the parking permit stickers.

Preserves poet's home

Tor House Foundation realizes its dream

By JOANNE HODGEN

A CRAG-FACED man may be found on Carmel Beach chiseling large slabs of granite from the craggy cliffs each day. He carries the stones to a plot of land on Carmel Point where he learns from a stonemason how to mix mortar and lay stone on stone until a small cottage is built on the sandy earth. The year is 1919 and the young mason is poet Robinson Jeffers.

Tor House still stands because of the efforts of a group of Carmel citizens who banded together to raise funds for its preservation 16 years after the poet's death.

A dramatic monument to Jeffers, the stone and mortar home evolved slowly over the years from its inauspicious beginnings. Following completion of the cottage, a garage was erected to protect Jeffers' new Ford from the sea air. In 1924, Hawk Tower with its four turrets was built as a study for his beloved wife, Una, and as a playhouse for his twin sons, Garth and Donnan.

IN 1930, JEFFERS completed another addition to the house. A dining room was added which connected the original cottage and garage. He then began work on an east wing which was actually a second house. The ambitious project took 20 years and was finally completed in 1957.

The final link in Tor House was envisaged by Jeffers as a long sitting room connecting the east and west wings. However, it was his son, Donnan, who completed the addition in 1963, just one year after his father's death.

The poet never believed that his home would survive the generations. He wrote of Tor House:

If you should look for this place after a handful of lifetimes

Perhaps of my planted forest a few May stand yet, dark-leaved Australians or the cypress ...

Look for foundations of sea-worn granite,

my fingers had the art

To make stone love stone, you will find some remnant.

My ghost you needn't look for; it is probably Here, but a dark one, deep in the granite, not dancing on wind

With the mad wings of the day moon.

TOR HOUSE WILL remain standing. The Tor House Foundation, established 18 months ago as a non-profit organization, has purchased the half-acre parcel and home.

By 1978, taxes on the land had risen so high that Jeffers' heirs said that the historic house might have to be sold to developers.

The National Trust for Historic Preservation gave the Jeffers family a check for $5,000 Feb. 23, 1978, that secured a one-year purchase option for the Tor House Foundation and guaranteed the poet's son and daughter-in-law, Donnan and Lee, lifetime residency in the newest wing.

Spearheaded by Fred Farr, a Carmel attorney and former state senator, a group of Carmel citizens began a drive in early 1978 to raise $400,000 to purchase the property and permanently endow its maintenance.

In December 1978, the foundation reached its first installment goal of $67,000. The foundation had already collected some $105,000 in cash and pledges to qualify it for a $100,000 matching grant from the National Trust.

GENEROUS DONATIONS came in from groups and individuals. The Maurine Church Coburn Charitable Trust of Pebble Beach awarded $25,000 to the foundation; a $1,000 check was presented to Ted Balestreri on behalf of the American Tin Cannery Company; a Christmas fair sponsored by Carmel High raised $600; a contribution of $25,000 was unanimously approved by the Carmel City Council.

Among the fund-raising events sponsored by the Tor House Foundation were the Jeffers Country tours in October 1978 and July 1979. Though shrouded in fog, the daylong tours along the Big Sur coastline attracted poets, scholars, housewives and businessmen. Local performers read selections from Jeffers' work at points along the coast which inspired him as the buses wound their way south on Highway 1.

Three months later, Feb. 28, 1979, the Robinson Jeffers Tor House Foundation took formal possession of Tor House and Hawk Tower with the presentation of a $67,500 down payment to Donnan Jeffers.

FARR, THEN PRESIDENT and chairman of the Tor House Foundation, said, "We are most grateful to Mr. and Mrs. Jeffers for reducing the purchase price of Tor House (appraised at more than $500,000) and the National Trust for Historic Preservation in acquiring the option a year ago."

Finally, on Oct. 6, 1979, the dream and efforts of the Tor House Foundation were realized. A gala fund-raising event which boasted a reading by Jeffers' dear friend Dame Judith Anderson, marked the official opening of Tor House for public tours.

Tor House is now open for tours 12 hours each week on Fridays and Saturdays. No more than six visitors at a time are allowed in the house and reservations are required. The cost is $3.50 per person. For reservations or more information, phone curator Beth Wright at 624-9509 or 624-1813.

Currently, 40 percent of the $400,000 goal has been raised—enough to make payments and maintain portions of the house, according to David Hughes, president of the Foundation. The organization has four more years to raise the remaining funds.

HUGHES OUTLINED FIVE objectives that the foundation hopes to attain in the near future: preserve the house, develop a low-key educational center, develop a scholar-in-residence program, begin an oral history project and cultivate a general audience for Jeffers' work.

As California's first poet of ecology, Jeffers would approve of the foundation's efforts to protect his stone and mortar home from the often-misguided spirit of progress.

As he gazed over Carmel Bay from his home, Jeffers once wrote:

Therefore I belted

The house and the tower and courtyard with stone,

And have planted the naked foreland with future forest toward noon and morning; for it told me,

The time I was gazing in the black crystal,
To be faithful in storm, patient of fools, tolerant of memories and the muttering prophets.

It is needful to have night in one's body.

Business association sets goals for 80s

By TOM BROWN
President, Carmel Business Association

DURING THE DECADE of the 70s, the Carmel Business Association has seen our town change in many ways — some for the good and, of course, some not quite so good.

As a business association, we, like many residents, deplore the rapid decline of the service-type business. We resent the necessity for higher and higher rents which tend to drive out the plumbers, glazers and other services. As an association we don't like the few low quality shops which have managed to enter our town and are selling inferior merchandise.

DURING THE 70s, WE'VE managed to survive two energy crunches and a water shortage.

In 1974 we pulled together our resources as a business community and with joint advertising and good press, we survived. The pull together was even more remarkable during the water shortage — portable toilets on the streets, no water with meals in restaurants, and skimpy or no showers in the hostelries.

All cooperated and we survived.

At the beginning of our current gasoline shortage, CBA was instrumental in establishing and cooperating with all concerned with the gasoline "HOTLINE."

CBA IS STRONG. We now have a long-sought-for permanent office. We are made up of business and professional people who are, like our residential community, dedicated not only to business pursuits, but to maintaining the uniqueness, charm, and quality of life we all respect.

Members of CBA are dedicated to sound business ethics, to quality merchandise and service, and always to integrity.

We feel that the residential community and the business community cannot exist well without each other, but we also recognize that we must not infringe on one another.

During 1980 and in the coming years, we shall strive to maintain the high business standards already established by our association.

We shall strive for greater harmony between the business community and the residential community — and it is our fervent hope that we shall see a renewed spirit of cooperation between the association and our elected city officials.

Supervisor Sam Farr says:

County government strives to work for the people

By SAM FARR
County Supervisor

THIS PAST YEAR THE Monterey County Board of Supervisors, under my leadership as chairman, began stripping away the road blocks of regulatory underbrush that grows like weeds in the paths of private citizens.

While county government is going through a selfanalysis and evaluation of its ability to provide more efficient public services, our society has assumed that our political system is flawed, sinful and untrustworthy.

Perhaps more than any other issue of the next decade will be the test of our political system. If it is to survive we must realize that our government and politics are about people, and a belief that the innate human capacity is honesty, capable of wise decision making and self determination.

To properly work people must individually and collectively take more responsibility for their own improvement and wellbeing as well as that of their families, their state and their nation.

MY ROLE, AS YOUR elected official, is to foster a healthy decision-making environment to enable people to realize their own potential in a moral, caring and sensitive way. To accomplish this your Board of Supervisors has challenged the assumptions of the '60s and discarded the paternalistic practices of the past. We have begun to improve the way we learn, the way we heal, and the way we govern.

Today we can reflect on our past and use our new accomplishments to build for a better future.

We have weathered a fiscal crisis to local government and now stand in sound financial solvency with a model county budget format.

We swept away bureaucratic delays to bring issues to the board level in faster format, more complete agendas and easy to follow minutes.

By-laws have been revised, greater public participation has been instituted with the formation of citizen task forces to deal with growth management, energy, planning procedure revisions and long-range human services planning.

WE HAVE CONTRACTED with the private non-profit social and cultural organizations to the highest level in county history.

We have begun round table study sessions with county department heads, their staffs and the interested public to learn and discuss direction for the future.

We rewrote the rulebook on county procedures, consolidated numerous boards and commissions, opened up avenues for more direct contact with the board and initiated a process to make the business of government readily understood and more accountable to the citizens it serves,

Our in-house cleanup has been such a success that other counties are adopting some of the same procedures.

CONTROVERSIAL BUT BOLD steps were taken to consolidate three separate municipal court districts into one district with one administrator.

Additionally, we have adopted a County Growth Management Policy, augmented the planning department budget to modernize our county General Land Use Plan, addressed for the first time in county history the shortage of affordable housing to working class people and revamped permit appeal procedures.

The environmental shortages of the decade in land, water, and fuel have taught us in public office that this great county will endure only if we have the proper reverence and respect for its natural systems.

We are now gathering the resource data to manage growth and technology so that we can enhance the quality of life in this place we call home.

THE NEXT DECADE will require careful use of our newly gained information to implement permit procedures that will prevent old problems from reappearing.

Demand will continue for more services with less funds available to provide them.

Tax talk will prevail with the forces of Jarvis-type cut government pitted against the close-loopholes-tax-reformers.

The Carmel Valley Master Plan will be a model for unincorporated communities in the state. Its success will hinge on its implementation.

Energy ethics will be a major issue with pressure to readjust our habits, particularly energy, of waste and automobile usage. We will turn off more lights, retrofit our homes for solar hot water heating and abandon big empty cars to car pooling, bus travel and hopefully trains.

WATER ALLOCATION TO local communities will be adopted while we learn more about our ground water supply and usage patterns.

Reclamation of wastewater will become attractive and accepted.

The cut, squeeze and trim pressure will lead to closer evaluation of our governments and their ability to deliver cost-effective services. Such evaluations will lead to consolidation and reorganization of many single purpose governments such as fire, sewage and water districts.

The Local Agency Formation Commission will emerge as one of the most important bodies in local government and probably the most controversial.

I AM VERY OPTIMISTIC about our future providing our community with every opportunity to take an active role in electing knowledgeable people to public office.

Reflecting on this past year's beginnings I can't think of any greater political gift that I could leave my new daughter Jessica's generation than the assurance that much of the quality of yesterday's past will be preserved for tomorrow's future.

We have learned how not to fall with our forest or errode with our soils.

Your Board of Supervisors has demonstrated that it can give hope, satisfaction and opportunity which is essential to the success of government in the years ahead. To this end I pledge my support.

1979 good year for schools despite financial problems

By CARL WILSEY
Superintendent, Carmel Unified School District

DESPITE THE UNCERTAINTIES and the turmoil created for our school district by the dual effects of Proposition 13 and the Serrano-Priest decision, 1979 was a good year for the Carmel public schools.

We were blessed during this last year of the closing decade with an outstanding staff, supportive parents, and excellent students.

According to every measure available to us, our students continue to score at or near the top on state and national achievement tests, and to perform well in college and in the work setting.

THE NEW YEAR OF 1980 should see a continuation of the same basic programs and services as were provided in 1979—barring any new surprises from the state legislature, the courts, or citizens such as Jarvis and Gann.

I believe I can predict with some certainty that the following things will transpire in the year ahead:

• We will continue to place a heavy emphasis upon the "basics" in the Carmel schools, and students will continue to score high on state and national tests.

• We will continue our pursuit of excellence by raising our expectations of students and their performance.

We will upgrade our program in language arts, with special emphasis upon spelling.
We will continue our efforts to make more effective use of

We will take steps to refurbish Carmel High School, utilizing special state funds and proceeds from the sale of undeveloped property.

 We will be faced with a continuing decline in enrollment, with all that implies in regard to staffing, income and program changes.

• We will continue to improve our communication with parents and the community as a whole.

• We will come to rely more and more on user fees and for donations from the public to support our programs.

HOPEFULLY, THE DECADE of the '80s will bring more stability to the funding of the public schools so that planning can be done on a longer range basis than has been possible in the past.

Both of these factors should contribute to the stability of the Owner of facility picketed here

Oakland hospital controversy comes to Carmel

CARMEL REAL ESTATE agent Bruce L. Jones Jr. labeled as "out-and-out lies" accusations made against a convalescent hospital that he owns in Oakland.

An Oakland group called United Neighbors in Action (UNA) picketed Lois Renk Real Estate Office on Junipero, where Jones works, on Dec. 8 to dramatize charges against the local owners of Essex Convalescent Hospital.

Jones, of Carmel Highlands, is principal owner of Essex. The other owners are Stanley E. Boyer and Daniel W. Klein, both of 208 Vista Verde, Carmel Valley.

The three partners have been named in a $2.7 million lawsuit filed against Essex by the Alameda County District Attorney, alleging 114 violations of the state's business and professions code.

UNA representative Constance Williams said 13 citations were issued to Essex earlier this year by the state Health Department after a probe of patient care at the 99-bed facility. She said that complaints from UNA, a non-profit nursing home reform group, prompted the state probe.

JONES CLAIMED THAT the UNA "induced" the DA to file the suit against Essex. He said the lawsuit is "a heck of an allegation with little fact.

"If any one of these accusations had a basis in fact, we couldn't be in business for five minutes," Jones said.

Jones said that he had owned convalescent hospitals for 27 years. He said, "It's a militant group that's surfaced to dramatize out-and-out lies."

Asked about the state citations, he said he was appealing the matter in court.

CHANTING "WE SHALL OVERCOME" and carrying placards, the estimated 24 UNA pickets demanded that Jones and his partners fire Essex administrator Lindsay Bond and also answer charges of "patient beating, improper medication and deplorable conditions at the facility." The pickets included Essex nurses and members of the Oakland Gray Panthers.

Williams said that UNA submitted a complaint to the state in May after a supervising nurse at Essex allegedly kicked a 69-year-old black wheelchair patient.

It was later discovered by the state that the supervisor, working as a registered nurse at Essex, was not licensed. He was fired in May, according to Williams, who added that UNA also wants the hospital administrator fired.

She said that the picketing in Carmel "is a last resort to pressure the owners" to fire the administrator and upgrade patient care.

RICH MICHAELS, DEPUTY district attorney in charge of consumer fraud for Alameda County, confirmed last week that a civil suit was filed June 4 against Essex's owners.

A PICKET LINE IS formed in front of the office of real estate agent Bruce L. Jones Jr. in December to protest "improper patient care" at a convalescent hospital he owns in Oakland. Members of the Oakland-based United Neighbors in Action said that they came to Carmel as a "last resort," They want Jones and his partners to upgrade the care provided at the facility. (Steve Hellman photo)

He said that the suit, charging violations of the state business and professions code, seeks more than $2.7 million in maximum penalties. It also asks for an injunction to force Jones and the other owners to operate the facility within state regulations.

According to Michaels, "The state citations issued against Essex over a number of years have been the most in the county. This is the first civil suit we've filed against a skilled care facility."

WALTER CLAYTON, THE state health inspector who conducted the investigation of Essex, said last week that he has been aware of problems at Essex for three years.

"Our people almost lived in Essex for awhile. We're monitoring them very closely," he said.

Class A citations were issued, according to Clayton, after a patient died, and in the case of the unlicensed nurse who worked as night supervisor.

Clayton insisted that patient care has improved at Essex since the probe, and that Essex "is not the worst facility" that he has investigated. He added, "It was never so serious that we considered revoking their license." He conceded, however, that the district attorney's lawsuit, which is based on his probe, is unprecedented for Alameda County.

The 13 citations issued by Clayton could cost Essex operators as much as $17,000 according to one Oakland newspaper account. Clayton said the two Class A violations are punishable by $5,000 fines, the severest penalty the state can levy in health care cases. Jones blames staffing difficulties for the problems at Essex, according to Clayton.

A court order was issued in December for Jones to release financial records, according to Michaels. He said, "A common defense is that the owner doesn't have the finances to provide adequate services. The records will prove whether or not a disproportionate amount of money is going to the owners and administrator."

Michaels said that he expected to have the financial records within one month. The lawsuit will go to trial in mid-1980, he said.

New building for Neill Engineering

THE NEILL BUILDING, a 2,750 square foot expansion project to be constructed at the southwest corner of Mission and Fifth, is pictured here in the architect's view from Mission Street. A small house next to Neill Engineers' existing building will be demolished to make room for the new structure, which will adjoin the existing Neill offices. The downstairs of the two-story building will house the expanded offices of the engineering firm. The upstairs level will include four studio apartments the Carmel Planning Commission approved the design concept of the Neill Building at its Dec. 19 meeting. The commission also approved a variance to allow for the purchase of two in-lieu parking spaces for the commercial structure. The city code required four parking spaces, but the design of the building could only provide for two. Clayton Neill Jr. and Gilbert Neill are the owners; Olof Dahlstrand is the architect.

Library space problem may be resolved in 80s

By JOANLEE CHILDERS Library Director Harrison Memorial Library

THE DECADE JUST passed was a time of furious growth for the Carmel area, in every aspect of its culture.

The stream of new residents, added businesses and the increased numbers of visitors to the area produced a comparable response in library activity.

The library system has responded to the events and public interests of the '70s by expanding the subject areas emphasized, and has brought the decade to a close with the beginnings of a major reassessment of its holdings and the "space" conundrum.

With respect to the library collections (holdings), during last September, we commenced a long overdue inventory of the Harrison, Memorial Library materials. We anticipate an intensive two-week session Monday, Jan. 21 through Friday, Feb. 1, during which period the entire staff will concentrate total energies on the inventory from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m.; we will then open our doors to the public from 3-6 p.m. daily during that period. Saturday and Sunday schedules will not be changed. The library will be open from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday and from 1-5 Sunday.

THE SERIOUS LACK of space (work room, book shelf space, quiet reading and studying rooms) has given rise to a general air of not-so-quiet desperation in our hallowed building.

We find universal appreciation of our Italian-Mediterranean structure, in a lovely setting, and we have always worked with such advantage to maintain the warm and comfortable atmosphere.

Through the interest and strong efforts of successive library boards in cooperation with successive city councils, and the continuing expertise of an exceptionally capable, perceptive, indefatigable staff, there has developed a library of high quality.

WE CONCENTRATED ON improving and expanding the scope of our collections in the '70s and heeded the call for broader topics of reference, such as the civic, medical and legal information which the public has properly assumed as its right to know.

As knowledge expands and is published on paper subject to rapid deterioration, prey to the elements and chemicals around us, technology has provided us with means of preserving, on microfilm and fiche, magazines and newspapers for future reference. We do not expect public acceptance of the machine as a vehicle for pleasure reading, but appreciate microform's dual purpose: preservation of a segment of published knowledge, in a relatively small space.

TO KEEP PACE WITH the increasing onslaught of the printed and filmed word, the early 1980s must bring a gratifying resolution to the Harrison Library's severe space shortage by construction of a second building close to the main

In our renovation of 1976, we redesigned the use of our beautiful but dysfunctional building, and our Sunset rooms, to what we feel is maximum efficiency—recognizing that small inroads can be achieved in less than half the area necessary.

The library board of trustees is in the process of studying alternative solutions to this dilemma, with a determination to act early into the new decade.

What's ahead for 1980s?

Local Sierra Club member sees environmental changes in 80s

By EARL MOSER Member, Sierra Club

I HIS ARTICLE WILL review the environmental changes which occurred during the last decade, and attempt to forecast additional changes expected in the 1980s.

First, one should explain what one means by environment. Environment consists of those natural surroundings which makes an area a desirable or undesirable place to live. It includes scenic beauty, clean air, adequate clean water, safe disposal of wastes, free movement on roads and streets and wooded hillsides.

The area we are talking about is the south side of the Carmel-Monterey ridgeline and includes Carmel, Carmel Valley and the Highlands.

WHAT HAPPENED IN these areas in the 1970s?

• Growth. Greatest growth occurred in Carmel Yalley. There was considerable filling-in of homes on vacant lots in Carmel and Yankee Point, but new residential construction in the '70s produced an estimated 70 percent increase in population in Carmel Valley.

This increase is not disastrous. We still have a good place to live; however, uncontrolled, explosive growth could change a rural to an urban environment.

• Parks. In 1968, citizens led by John McDaniel donated $85,000—an amount then matched by the county—to purchase 55 acres of land surrounding Jacks Peak.

Dr. Talcott Bates had carried this unique property for four years to save it from developers. In 1971, the county, with assistance from HUD, purchased almost 500 acres east of Jacks Peak at a bargain price—less than $700,000—from Del Monte Properties. The people were indeed fortunate that this happened and that we now have Jacks Peak Park.

In 1973 voters approved formation of a Monterey Peninsula Park District. One of the most outstanding open space, or park, areas acquired by this six-year-old district is Garland Mention should also be made of acquisition of Odello West 155 acres and the 48-acre Admiral Hudson homestead by the state Department of Parks and Recreation.

Also outstanding and the culmination of several years of effort was the purchase by the city of Carmel in 1972 of the 15-acre Flanders estate, followed by acquisition by gift and purchase of the 171/2-acre Doolittle Tract.

• Wastewater Treatment. In the early '70s the Carmel

Sanitary District treatment plant near the mouth of Carmel River was upgraded from primary to secondary treatment and the outfall was moved from the water line to 600 feet offshore. The district is now engaged in efforts to use treated wastewater to irrigate the golf courses in Del Monte Forest.

Then in 1977 Carmel Bay was declared an Area of Special Biological Significance (ASBS).

• Monterey Peninsula Water District. This district was approved by voters in 1978. It is beginning to get under way and is working toward: a) protection of the Carmel Valley aquifer; b) ensuring that no Peninsula area grows so fast as to take more than its share of a limited possible increase in available water; c) search for augmentation of available water.

Now FOR A LOOK TO the next 10 years. What will happen to the environment in the coming decade? These are • Growth. Carmel and adjacent areas, including the Highlands, is pretty well built out. The Highlands is limited by the county Health Department regulations, which say "steep slopes and thin soil will not take septic tank leach fields." That leaves Carmel Valley as the possible area for expansion.

From 1970 to 1980 the Carmel Valley population, now estimated at somewhat over 10,500, increased by approximately 70 percent. When the Carmel Valley Master Plan is adopted—and it will be adopted—the amount of permitted growth during the '80s will be about half that rate.

 Air Quality. Carmel Valley is vulnerable to Los Angelestype smog because a temperature inversion often places a lid on the small Valley air basin. Automobile exhaust is a major contributor to smog. In 1973 and part of 1974 a monitoring station at Mid-Valley showed readings high enough to be alarming for the future.

The year 1979 has been particularly fortunate for us weather-wise. Temperature inversions were practically nonexistent. They will come back.

• Dedication of Land. I foresee a considerable amount of land during the '80s being dedicated to public bodies such as Jacks Peak Park, Garland Park, state parks, or in the form of scenic easements—that is non-development easements. I say this because the Carmel Valley Master Plan will give "plus points" to subdivision projects which provide such dedications.

• The Hatton Canyon Road. I predict that this road will not be built in the 1980s. The reason for the prediction is that gasoline availability will be curtailed more and more. The reason is financial: the U.S. cannot continue to pay $90 billion and more for imports of petroleum products, and the supply and/or price will make expanded auto use unfeasible.

• Four lanes for Carmel Valley Road. This will probably be carried out as far as Valley Hills. I suggest that for the reasons listed above, development of the road will not proceed past

• Trail to Jacks Peak Park from Carmel Valley. I predict that a trail for hikers and horseback riders will be built early in

• Water Rationing. Sometime in the next 10 years we will have another dry year, and we will also face as a result a water shortage, which will very likely result in the reimposition of • Floods. I also predict that sometime in the next 10 years there will be a flood which will enter the living rooms of Mission Fields homes.

Senator Cranston believes:

U.S. faces dangerous time in 1980s if SALT II dies

By ALAN CRANSTON U.S. Senator, California

FOR JUST A MOMENT imagine a calamity that, if it ever does occur, would make gasoline lines, recession, the high cost of living - all our problems - seem trivial by comparison.

Nuclear attack and retaliation would be that ultimate catastrophe — the worst in all human history.

Upwards of 20 million Americans would die in a nuclear exchange in just the time it takes to read this page. The world as we know it would change in terrible ways.

Obviously, California — because of our military bases, vast aerospace industry and economic importance to the rest of the nation — would be a prime target.

Editors in San Jose, Pasadena and Long Beach recently devoted considerable newspaper space to show what a nuclear attack would mean in their communities.

The same picture also could be drawn for other high risk California targets: bomber bases outside Riverside and in the central valleys, oil refineries near Richmond and Martinez, major commercial and transportation hubs like San Francisco, Sacramento, Los Angeles, the Oxnard-Ventura area and San Diego.

OUR POPULATION CENTERS probably would be hit, not with a single bomb as in Hiroshima, but with clusters of several one-megaton warheads.

Crushing pressure and intense heat would vaporize homes and buildings, explode fuel depots, buckle freeways and send firestorms over the landscape.

Days later the number of fatalities would grow steadily, in part because medical facilities and personnel would have been destroyed. Our industrial capacity would be shattered, our economy crippled beyond belief.

Years later, survivors still would have to contend with radiation poisoning and environmental contamination, with food shortages, altered global weather patterns and deforestation. Survivors would have to face consequences of massive damage to the planet's ozone layer and accelerated polar melting.

To REDUCE THE DANGER that these horrors will befall us, every American President from Eisenhower to Carter has sought to control aspects of the nuclear arms race.

The most recent step in that process is also the most ambitious. For the first time, a written treaty - SALT II forces the Soviet Union to dismantle hundreds of its strategic weapon launchers. The treaty puts strict limits on new weapons as well, limits which will hold the Soviets to thousands fewer deliverable nuclear warheads than they could build without this agreement.

SALT II gives the U.S. a baseline for judging what the Russians are up to. And it keeps them from interfering with our satellites and other technical means we will use to make sure they live up to their end of the bargain.

SALT II is a consensus treaty. We do not consider it a perfect agreement; neither do the Russians.

It does not end the arms competition. I wish that it did. But SALT II does make that competition safer and more predictable, with clear rules and verifiable limits where otherwise there would be no rules, no limits.

And SALT II is the indispensable precondition for moving on to an effort to achieve much deeper and more significant cuts in strategic armaments in SALT III.

THOUGH SALT II IS only a modest step toward reducing the nuclear threat, I support the treaty strongly, and will work hard for Senate passage without reservations or "killer" amendments.

If SALT II is rejected, the U.S. will have no control over the Soviet arms buildup. The Russians will be free once again to use any and all means of concealment. Without SALT we will have to assume the worst, and we will assume the worst. That. is expensive — and dangerous — guesswork.

If this treaty dies in the U.S. Senate, the decade of the 1980s will be a most dangerous time for America and for the world.

What's ahead for 1980s?

Brunn tells what he'd like to see city achieve in 80s

By HOWARD BRUNN Carmel City Councilman

CARMEL AND THE YEAR ahead. I can't imagine any but good things happening to Carmel and its citizens.

What follows is not necessarily all of the things I would like to see done in a year, nor are they in any order of importance, nor can they all be accomplished in a year.

With the above in mind, I would like to see the City Council establish itself as a policy-making body only, all of which is in the best tradition of professional management. I know I echo the voter's wish, but I feel the necessity to put my feelings in print.

MOVING ON, I'D like to see better communication between all boards and commissions. There is no reason to work in isolation or against one another when we're all working more-or-less for the same thing: the good of Carmel and its residents.

I would like to see a minibus system in Carmel for the elderly and those, in these energy-saving times, who wish to ride the

In fact, I would like to see a coherent energy policy for the city, one that saw public buildings, where possible, heated by passive or active solar energy.

I would like to see the city and county get together to complete the beach-walk plan.

I would also like to see and may introduce legislation to rescind the salaries for City Council members.

JUST WARMING UP, I would like to see the city seeking help on getting Odello East into public ownership.

I would like to see a new library annex with adequate parking and restroom facilities.

I would wish, as many another has wished, that no council meeting go beyond 10:30 p.m. unless there is some dire

The above are just a smattering of the things I would like to see Carmel act on in its future.

I would like to see the police in smaller, more fuel-efficient cars. Along with that, I would like to see more foot patrols for business and residential communities.

I THINK IT WOULD be well worth it to look into the idea of a Medallion program for significant and historical buildings.

I think it would be a good idea to institute a landlord-tenant board to mitigate rentals in problem areas and work with the City Council in providing leadership and a moral voice that will unite the city behind its council.

I HEN, TOO, THERE is the youth of our small town. Our future. I think they should be brought into the process, have more of a say in the Youth Center and perhaps find chairs on boards and committees. It would be great to balance tradition and the wisdom of our elders with the energy of youth.

Finally, and maybe the most important of all, I would wish to see fun reinstituted in Carmel and its government. I wish for Carmel to keep its specialness, its sense of humor, and remember not to take itself and its doings too seriously.

TRENDS FOR HER

Pacific Grove and Carmel Rancho Shopping Center.

By HANS ZANTMAN Zantman Art Galleries

PREDICTING THE FUTURE is a challlenging but risky thing to attempt.

The most we can hope to do is apply our past experience to what we guess the future will bring.

From this standpoint, our assessments of trends over which we have no control-international political and economic developments, for instance—are still just guesses. But at least we-the Zantman Art Galleries—do have, as a solid basis for our speculation, a history of more than 20 years in the art business in Carmel.

IN OUR MORE than 20 years, we have found the art market in Carmel to be one of the most dynamic in the country. We have seen the number of galleries in the area grow from a handful to over 80, and increasing numbers of people from all over the world traveling to Carmel for the specific purpose of searching for, and hopefully buying, fine art. Carmel, in short, has developed from an artists' colony to an art center.

With the burgeoning numbers of visitors coming into the Monterey Peninsula area, the Zantman Art Galleries have experienced a steady expansion in the art business.

We can happily report that each year has exceeded the preceding one in total volume of painting and sculpture sales. This, of course, is what we, as a gallery operation, have hoped to accomplish, but more importantly, it has given sustenance and hope to the many. fine artists we represent in our two galleries in Carmel and one in Palm Desert. It is most gratifying to see living artists making a living and to feel that our encouragement has been instrumental in their success.

AS FAR AS THE future is concerned, we are optimistic. The Zantman Art Galleries have weathered recession, inflation and gas

But, were we to plot art sales against time, we would find that the graph has gone steadily upward, and we foresee no reason for a leveling-off or a downward trend.

In other words, we can extrapolate an increasingly healthy art market for the future. However, as previously implied, circumstances over which we have no control could have an adverse effect. And here we are speaking specifically about rampant inflation which, of course, increases our operating costs; and, perhaps of even greater importance, the energy crisis which, if it leads to more severe gas shortages, could have extremely adverse effects on the economy of the entire Monterey Peninsula—an economy based, after all, on tourism.

So our optimism is qualified by those two factors-inflation and energy. But somehow the Zantman Art Galleries have survived for 20 years in Carmel and we feel that somehow we will survive another 20.

Churches face big task in 80s

By THE REV. JAMES BROCK Rector, St. Dunstan's Episcopal Church

WHAT ARE THE ISSUES facing the churches in the 1980s?

As more people see their churches as "extended families" in a time when nuclear families are cutting themselves off from their families, the churches will be spending more time and effort in the areas of marriage enrichment: family counseling, crisis counseling, vocational counseling and premarital counseling.

The churches think more of themselves as a "family

The Carmel Pine Cone Carmel Valley Outlook 624-0162 of families" in an effort to combat the rising divorce rate and the breakdown of family life so prevalent in the 70s.

IN THE 1980s WE will see more ecological awareness among religious leaders and members of the churches.

With the tremendous rise in the cost of gasoline and the diminishing supply of energy resources, many congregations will be adopting programs of voluntary simplicity, where they will reduce their consumption of energy and develop methods of economic frugality in family budgets and church programs.

In their concern for responsible land use, many Carmel and Carmel Valley church members have expressed interest and pleasure in the development of the Carmel Valley Master Plan.

It is hoped that there will be an even greater sense of responsibility in land use and conservation of resources in the future.

IN THE LATE 1970s many churches adopted Indo-Chinese families and started programs relating to "World Hunger."

Feelings of nationalism are set aside as church families give up one meal a week and send the money saved on that meal to other nations facing hunger and starvation.

This concern for "World Hunger" will continue into the 80s with positive programs for better distribution of the world's food and medical supplies.

The REV. WILLIAM Lazareth, at a recent Lutheran church conference in Minnesota, said "The task of the church is not to bring people to Jesus, but Jesus to the people."

This statement reflects a growing concern of churches that the Judeo-Christian message be communicated to the nonchurched members of every community.

The quotation in Matthew 5:13, "Ye are the salt of the world," in reference to Jesus' disciples, is being considered more literally as Jews and Christians attempt to communicate values and ethical standards to individuals in their jobs, their political life, their view of international problesm and personto-person relationships. The churches applaud the emphasis on human values taken by President Carter, and carried through by the United Nations Security Council.

"Ethics in Politics" will become a concern of the churches in an attempt to avoid a repetition of the problems of Watergate and Vietnam.

The Pope's visit to America is another sign of the attempt of speak to the people.

Many churches have started groups for the study of the "Ethics of Decision Making" in husiness and professional life.

"Ethics of Decision Making" in business and professional life. These groups are concerned with Judeo-Christian values in business relationships and everyday decisions.

We will see more of this type of study as the churches attempt to be more relevant to the lives of their members.

AM VERY OPTIMISTIC about the future.

People are not only attending their churches more regularly, but they are trying to apply Judeo-Christian principles to their life situations and their relationships with others.

I feel we are passing from the narcissism of the 70s into a genuine concern for fellow human beings.

With Dag Hammarskjold, I can truly say, "For all that has been 'thanks' and for what will be, 'yes."

Community Hospital plans expansion

By FRED SORRI

Director of Public Information Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula

BY THE END OF THIS decade, Community Hospital of the Monterey Peninsula hopes to have added first an ancillary outpatient wing and then 20 patient rooms.

By the end of this century, the hospital trustees hope to have achieved their long-range master plan objective of a total of 300 patient rooms.

But these plans by the trustees of this private not-forprofit hospital are subject to the approval of the government's comprehensive health planners.

Though there is seldom a vacancy in the 172 private rooms of the hospital on Carmel Hill, the government's formula for permitting expansion is based upon the area's hospital bed occupancy rate. As long as there are empty beds at Eskaton Monterey Hospital, Community Hospital may not be permitted to expand.

THIS IS ONE REASON there are no patient rooms in the first phase of the hospital's expansion plans which call for a two-story ancillary out-patient treatment wing to be built on the west side of the hospital. Early this year, the application topermit construction of this ancillary outpatient treatment wing will be filed. If permission is received, construction might start by the end of the year.

The main level of the proposed wing would contain outpatient registration and waiting areas, outpatient clinic space; relocated and expanded outpatient radiology, expanded clinical laboratory, personnel facilities and a classroom.

The garden level of the proposed new wing would contain respiratory therapy, electrocardiogram and cardiopulmonary stress laboratory, occupational-recreational therapy, pharmacy, employee health, classrooms for in-service education, nursing administration, business office and storage.

IF PERMISSION IS granted, the 20-patient room addition would be added later this decade. That would be a two-story enclosure of the Great Garden Court connecting four nursing floors-Garden North to Garden South, Main North to Main

By the end of the century, the hospital hopes to add a threestory North Pavilion to bring its patient room total to 300.

Mello sees energy, inflation as critical issues in 80s

By HENRY MELLO Assemblyman, Twenty-Eighth District

HAVING JUST COMPLETED my third year in the California State Assembly, I feel a sense of accomplishment in having dealt with a number of difficult issues.

I am thankful for my background in business and agriculture, since it has prepared me for many of the complex problems we face in California.

What about the 1980s?

I believe that inflation and our energy needs will be the critical issues of this new decade. We in California have always been leaders in technological advances, and I expect to see us continue in that leadership role. As I see it, energy independence is the key to cutting our soaring rate of inflation.

SINCE I HAVE been serving as the chairman of the Assembly Committee on Aging, I have been in a position to better understand and solve the problems of our senior

I recently conducted a hearing in Seaside on the problems that seniors encounter with their insurance. We heard expert testimony from all sides, and a Peninsula resident. Evelvn Carstens, also presented some interesting facts on the problem.

I always welcome the opportunity to bring key Sacramento officials to our district in order to learn of our residents' problems.

I expect to continue working throughout the '80s to enact a better quality of life for our seniors in California.

DURING MY FIRST three years in the Assembly, I have held a number of town hall meetings in the district. Many of you came and shared your views with me, which I find most helpful in my work in Sacramento.

Communication is the key to effective government, therefore, I encourage you to let me know your position. If you can't see me in person, please call or write.

In closing, I wish to point out that during my present term, 18 of the 26 bills I introduced in the legislature were signed into law. This is a 70 percent rate of effectiveness—nearly twice that of the 37 percent average of my colleagues in the Assembly.

I hope to maintain this high rate of effectiveness in working with my fellow legislators in Sacramento as your representative.

What's ahead for 1980s?

Realtor predicts increases in cost, demand for homes to continue in 80s

By CHRISTOPHER BOCK

Former President, Carmel Board of Realtors

THE YEAR 1979 HAS been one of many signals of things to come in local real estate in the new decade.

We have seen an end to the market conditions which have allowed speculators to turn fast and large profits on any type of property, regardless of condition or location.

We have felt a tightening in the market—where style, condition, decor, financing and many other factors are necessary for a good sales price.

We have seen interest rates climb to new highs where the real estate lending rate approaches the annual inflation rate.

THESE AND OTHER, factors have brought about a return to a more "real" Carmel market—a market where unique properties sell for strong prices and the less "Carmelish" areas surrounding Carmel provide a good bedroom community of generally more affordable family-oriented

In 1979 we have begun to feel in earnest the effects of growth limitation activity which will be a major factor in the 1980s.

For years the Monterey Peninsula Country Club area of Pebble Beach and the Carmel Valley have provided growth outlets for the Carmel market.

In 1980 we find that Pebble Beach is literally built-out with little area for future expansion and the valley entering a period of very slow and controlled growth as outlined in its new Master Plan.

On top of an always short supply of building sites in Carmel, the loss of our two major growth areas has caused an immense increase in value in the remaining undeveloped building sites. Lot prices in some areas have doubled and even tripled. This increase has been reflected in the prices of re-sale homes as well.

In looking ahead to the 1980s, it is probably easiest to divide local property into two categories.

THE FIRST WOULD BE the specialty home peculiar to our market—the homes along the beach, the Comstocks, the "charmers," second homes, and the larger home on Carmel Point and South of Ocean Avenue in Carmel.

These homes are emotional with so-called purchases-made discretionary dollars. In other words the purchase costs do not come from a tight monthly budget for housing, but rather from luxury dollars spent at the whim of the spender.

This market, and the homes in it, will know no bounds in the 1980s. Their basic scarcity and the affluence of our society will cause rapid and continued inflation in value.

THE SECOND GROUP OF homes are those which provide basic-although very nice-housing for the local permanent employed residents of our area. The demand for these homes will be great in the 1980s, and their supply will be very little increased.

There is, however, a basic problem brewing in this type of home. It is best put in the form of a question. Who will be able to afford to live in these homes? How will the young family of our area ever be able to get started on home ownership?

A typical family home selling for $225,000 will cost, after normal down payment, over $1,800 per month—not including taxes, insurance, utilities, maintenance, etc. How many families can afford a housing expense of over $2,000 per month?

Building costs, scarcity, and strong demand will keep this type of home inflating in cost, but not at the rate of the more unique Carmel home simply due to economics.

Basically, homes will cost more in the 1980s. There will not be many more available, yet the movement of people away from the urban centers to areas such as the Monterey Peninsula continues unabated.

If you have a home here, treasure it; if you don't—do anything legal to get on board. For many of our young families the train has already left the station, and it is gaining speed!

'It's been a blessing for a lot of blind people'

Monterey Peninsula Blind Cente

By RON RUSSELL

AT LEAST SEVEN Carmelites and two Carmel Valley residents cannot enjoy the visual beauty of the Peninsula because they are blind.

When they require assistance, counseling, or information about blindness, they contact Monterey Peninsula Blind Service Center, 225 Laurel, Pacific Grove.

According to Bill Read, managing director of the Center, who himself is blind, "The Center offers social contacts, training, recreation, counseling and personal services to those with failing sight. It is a charitable organization, totally dependent upon community support, with absolutely no government funding."

The Center is many things to the blind. It is a club where the blind can attend luncheons, dinners and social events; a school where members learn Braille, Mobility Training and Daily Living Skills; a peer counseling and crisis center where the isolation and loneliness that ensue from blindness are handled; and finally, it is a unique volunteer organization.

EBEN WHITTLESEY, a former mayor of Carmel who has practiced law in Carmel since 1941, was on the Center board of governors in the early 1970's. Whittlesey, born with cataracts, lost his vision when he was 27 years old.

He finds the Blind Center valuable because: "Many blind people lose their vision in later life, making it harder for them to adjust. Often the difficulty of the initial adjustment is so traumatic that they resign themselves to failure. They become inactive, passive, introverted."

The Blind Center support programs stimulate social involvement and self-reliance, Whittlesey explained.

Mable Downie of Carmel, who has been coming to the Blind Center since 1971, agrees with Whittlesey: "It's a shame to think blind people are sitting out there alone. The Center is a wonderful place to meet people that have the same problems as you do. It's so wonderful having a place to come. I've told everyone I know about the Center."

EIGHTY-FIVE YEAR old Woodie Hawes of Carmel Valley and his wife. Alta, have taken part in programs at the Center for the past eight years.

Mrs. Hawes feels the Center is "a good place for lonely people."

Her husband added: "It's a wonderful place all right, and it's much better than when it first started. I don't know what people would do without it now — they're so used to it. For a Tot of people, it's the only place they can go."

VISITORS AT THE Blind Center soon learn not to pity the blind.

"A psychologically well-balanced person does not like to be pitied. Blind people take a good deal of pride in being selfreliant. Some become quite defensive about becoming an object of pity," said Whittlesey.

The blind endure inconveniences every day of their lives: matching socks, knotting ties, locating the cap to the toothpaste or the razor blade that fell to the floor.

THE BLIND, SUCH as Sam Brown of the Seaside Planning Commission, who lost his eyesight to diabetes, consider such catalogues meaningless and harmful. "The sighted just can't changes in one's life are so complete and devastating that only the blind can comprehend its dimensions," Brown said.

Read also finds such catalogues harmful because they concentrate on the negative. "The blind no longer want to advertise such matters. Instead, they want to concentrate on rehabilitation; they want to announce what they can do, not what they can't do."

The advice Woodie Hawes offers to sighted persons who are interested in understanding blindness, is simple: "Put on a blindfold and try walking around for a day. That's the best way to understand blindness, I can't tell anyone what it's like to be blind. The words wouldn't mean anything."

The blind can lead lives just as rich, fulfilling and pleasurable as the sighted. But, oddly, this is a fact that is easier to teach to the blind than to the sighted, who cling staunchly to the old notions of blindness.

Whittlesey warns the sighted about such attitudes, and especially warns sighted families who have blind members "not to regard them as helpless. Families must give a great deal of positive support to the blind without limiting their activities."

Whittlesey explained that families are often overlyprotective and overly-cautious about the safety of the blind person in their family. Such attitudes restrict mobility, keep him sitting home when he should be out learning to use transit understand or imagine blindness, because the losses and systems, becoming familiar with his environment, or just getting exercise.

CONTRARY TO THE ANCIENT mystique and stereotype surrounding them, the blind do not become super-humans sensitive, kind, thoughtful and stoic.

If the blind seem stronger or superior to the sighted, it is because blindness has forced them to draw on the great reserve of internal strength that all humans possess, but are rarely required to exert in their daily lives.

The sighted are inspired to witness this strength, yet equally intimidated, thinking they lack similar courage and maturity.

Joni Hyland, a volunteer instructor at the Center who has been blind since birth, notes that when the sighted are among the blind they wonder, "What would I do if I were blind?" Her answer to this question is simple: "You would adjust and sometimes be happy and sometimes be sad, just like everyone else."

This is the first point Hyland teaches volunteers, visitors and members who come to the Center.

Brown, who has been coming to the Center for two years, is one of Hyland's students.

"Oh, that little girl has done so much for me. She's just marvelous. With her help I'm dedicated to rebuilding my life. Sometimes I get mad and frustrated, but I'll never give up. I'm a fighter. It doesn't matter how many times I fall, I'm the type who gets up again and again," Brown said.

"My eyes are only a small part of my body, and I absolutely refuse to let those eyes kill off the rest of my body. The mental death that can happen to handicapped people will never happen to me.

"The secret is to learn to laugh at yourself. If you lose that, you'll surely die."

ALTHOUGH THE CENTER is operated by and for the blind, it also enjoys the services of several dedicated Woodie Hawes said, "Without the volunteers who drive me and my wife out to the Center we couldn't get there. In fact, without the volunteers, we couldn't even live in the Valley. We depend upon them greatly."

Bobbe Jeffers, one of the sighted volunteers, finds her work a "warm and exhilarating experience. Each person has a special personality and special problems, and I like to share them. Remarkably, they all seem to have such bright, cheerful outlooks on life."

Mrs. Jeffers, sister-in-law of the late Carmel poet, Robinson Jeffers, believes that the social events are extremely therapeutic, not only for the blind members, but also for the sighted volunteers.

ROMAYNE WETMORE, a former director of the New Monterey Neighborhood Center, now works 10 hours a week as a volunteer at the Blind Center. She agrees that the volunteers receive deep internal rewards.

"The love and the feeling that everyone shares here is tremendous. Many of our volunteers have been older people, people who are alone, and so the Blind Center becomes important to their lives. It's wonderful for all of us.

"I just can't describe the warmth and affection that comes from these people. But it's so much more, so very much more than we give them."

Joni Fancher, personnel director and vice-president of the Center's board of directors, is another blind volunteer who loves her work.

"I'm totally captivated with the Center. It's been a new world since I've begun working here," Fancher said. "Owing to diabetes I was losing my sight rapidly. At first I didn't know you didn't have to be totally blind to join the Center."

Now Mrs. Fancher stresses that the Center is not just for the totally blind. It's for anyone whose sight is beginning to fail.

READ SAID THAT there were only three blind organizations in California that refuse federal aid. When he visited one of th federally supported centers in the San Joaquin Valley, he found the center had 31 members and 32 paid employees.

"They received funds from the county, CETA and a federal grant," said Read. "I went in there and found nothing but people in offices, typing, filing, shuffling papers. They were using so much paper, I think they must have had the blind people out back cutting down trees to keep them supplied.

"They had counselors, psychologists, office help, and administrators — but none of them were blind."

Because of its policy to refuse federal aid, the Center is actually a private organization open to any blind or visually impaired person. The members pay a yearly fee of $1. Unlike other centers, where "clients" or "students" are told when to come and go and where activities and services are prescribed, the Monterey Peninsula Blind Service Center allows its members complete freedom.

THE CENTER IS supported through tax exempt donations and an annual fund-raising event called "Country Store Night." Community support comes from individuals and professional, academic, civic and service clubs, churches and charitable groups.

The Center recently received a $10,800 grant from the Maurine Church Coburn Charitable Trust.

With this money, sections of the Center will be remodeled and improved for fire safety.

Read said that the building was probably first built in 1922. Several churches have used the building. The Lions Club now provides the building to the Center for $1 a year, with the maintenance and insurance funded by the Blind Service Center. Under the terms of the lease, the Center may remain at the site as long as it suits its needs.

IN KEEPING WITH the democratic structure of the Center, the members and board of directors meet informally every Friday afternoon. At these meetings announcements and suggestions are made and business and Center policies are discussed and voted upon.

After the meeting, there is a social event. Members narrate stories of vacations, outings, read articles on matters concerning the blind, or simply present a personal problem and ask the group for assistance.

One member's problem (matching his socks) was easily remedied when another informed him that plastic clips can be purchased which fasten the socks and keep them together while being laundered.

Another member said, "One of my greatest problems is pouring syrup on hot cakes. We operate by sound, you know, and syrup is absolutely silent. So I either pour too little or too much. When we pour coffee or milk or a highball, we keep one finger dipped into the rim of the cup, so when we feel the liquid, we stop. But we can't do that with syrup." This problem stumped the group.

The Center offers many recreational, social and educational activities. Occasionally, it organizes trips, picnics and even bowling events — there are special rails to help the blind bowl.

The Center also assists members in obtaining Braille books, cassettes, or phonograph records from the Library of Congress which supplies reading material to the blind all over the United States.

Ceramic, sewing and craft classes are also offered at the Center.

In a large dining room located behind the Center, they serve dinner once a month for $1.50. Lunch is served once a week; the cost is defrayed by a contribution of 50 cents.

Because the blind require special education, the Center also offers Braille classes — open to both sighted and blind members — on Wednesday evenings.

Also offered is a class in Daily Living Skills, where members learn to use kitchen appliances safely. The goal of the class is to help the blind become adept at housework, sewing, telephoning, writing, dressing and other such chores sighted persons perform without thought. These survival skills liberate the blind from reliance upon others.

ISOLATION, dependence and the loss of mobility are the blind's most depressive fears. The Center's mobility instructor, Sheila Williams, teaches survival skills that help the move around their homes and city environments.

Mrs. Fancher said that the "mobility worker's job is orientation and rehabilitation."

"She teaches members cane techniques and shows them how to organize their homes and how to find their way around town. She goes to their homes and determines exactly what they need to know. It's an individualized training program, too. Each person learns what he or she needs to know, and everyone works at his own speed."

With the aid of a mobility trainer, the blind learn to avoid parked cars, toys left on the sidewalk, protruding corners or branches, ledges, uneven steps, sudden changes in grades or slippery footing. They also learn to shop or travel by bus or taxi

Seeing-eye dogs have greatly aided rehabilitation, independence and mobility. Since seeing-eye dogs cannot be trained rapidly enough, many blind persons use red tipped canes to scout out their path.

WILLIAMS SAID, "Among the things I teach the blind are cane techniques which involve auditory feedback from the cane."

She explained that the cane is a tubular piece of aluminum with a plastic tip. As the cane is tapped on the sidewalk, it vibrates. These vibrations change when the person nears a building or an overhanging. "Large structures alter the sound waves, and we teach members to use these cues to avoid obstacles," Williams said.

"Basically," she continued, "I teach mental skills, and cane techniques are part of that training.

"The blind must learn to keep a route, to listen carefully, to concentrate, to be very attentive to direction."

ACCORDING TO READ, the philosophy that made the Center successful over the past years will be retained in the future. They will continue catering to human beings, not regulations or bureaucracy.

"I'd like to keep the volunteer core we have now, and I'd like to keep the Center's atmosphere similar to what it is now," Read said.

"Maybe one day we could find a more central location. I'd really like to see the Center serve the rest of Monterey County.

"We already serve people as far away as Salinas and Marina and Watsonville, and transportation is a real problem.

"There's certainly blind people out in our county sitting home alone and lost because they have no way of getting to the Center, or maybe they don't even know we're here. It'd be wonderful if we could reach every single person who needs help," Read said.

Reclamation project most critical issue

Problems of 70s to continue for sanitary district in 80s

By MICHAEL ZAMBORY General Manager Carmel Sanitary District

THE CARMEL SANITARY District was established in 1908 as one of the first such districts in the state of California.

Initially, the facilities included a collection system and community septic tank with a leach field in the beach sands adjacent to the Carmel River.

In 1939 the district constructed a primary treatment plant, which was the first such facility on the Monterey Peninsula.

In 1973, the district constructed a secondary treatment plant and ocean outfall. This modern facility utilizes the sophisticated "activated sludge process" for the secondary treatment of the wastewater.

The district serves approximately 12,000 residents and visitors within the city of Carmel and approximately 5,000 additional residents within the Del Monte Forest via a contract for such service with the Pebble Beach Sanitary District. At the advance-plan the sewage needs of those areas of land within its

2 million gallons of wastewater per day.

THE MOST CRITICAL problem facing the district at this time involves the state Water Resources Control Board action in 1975 designating a portion of the Carmel Bay as an "Area of Special Biological Significance."

This designation prohibits the discharge of treated wastewater into Carmel Bay during the summer months (May-October) and limits the discharge of treated wastewater into Carmel Bay during the winter months to a maximum of 2.4 million gallons per day.

After studying a number of options, the district chose to dispose of its summer effluent through a process of reclamation; which conveniently makes itself available because of the proliferation of golf courses within a reasonable distance of the treatment facility. This project, known as the "Early Start Disposal/Reclamation Project," is approaching the design phase at this time.

ANOTHER PROBLEM FACING the district is its responsibility toward serving the Carmel Valley and Carmel Highlands area.

As a service organization, it is the district's responsibility to present time; the treatment facility is processing approximately sphere of influence, normally identified by the shape of the watershed.

In its attempt to master-plan sanitary sewer service for the Carmel Valley and the Carmel Highlands, the district unfortunately is occasionally accused of fostering rapid growth. In actual fact, growth is controlled by land use designation; which in turn determines the size and general location of whatever sewer pipes are necessary in order to carry the load generated by the adjacent land use.

IN THE CASE OF the Carmel Valley, the district should be prepared with preliminary designs to sewer the Carmel Valley in the event evidence is presented of the deterioration or degradation of the Carmel Valley aquifer through the present and future use of septic tanks and leach fields.

If no such degradation occurs, it is possible that sanitary sewer pipelines might never be installed within the Carmel Valley. It is, however, the function of the district to be prepared in the event such a need arises.

INSOFAR AS THE Carmel Highlands area is concerned, the district as a service organization is available to assist those residents and property owners within that area in whatever action is proper and effective.

There is no aquifer to be concerned with in the Carmel Highlands; therefore, if proper zoning exists, the district's function would be to assist residents and property owners in the sewering of their property in whatever manner is legal and

The county Health Department recently advised the district of its concern over the apparent failure of some of the leach fields in the Carmel Highlands area because of the shallow soil mantle overlying the rocky land.

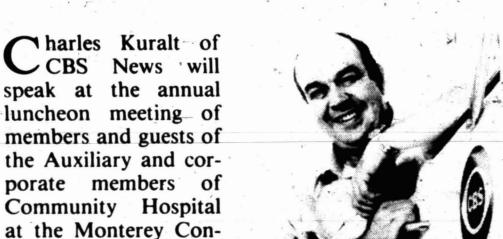

WHEN CONSIDERING THE long-term outlook for the district, we can anticipate changes in the regulations which will require a higher quality of final effluent in our treatment process.

We will have to continue searching for more efficient methods of operation in order to conserve energy. We will have to enhance our facilities in order to make them more environmentally acceptable.

We will continue our efforts to find additional markets for reclaimed water.

We will be continuing our efforts to find additional markets for reclaimed water.

We will continue having problems and will likely reach Excedrin headache number 2000 in the year 2000.

What's ahead for 1980s?

Panetta warns:

U.S. may face most challenging decade in its history

By LEON PANETTA
U.S. Representative

As THE 1980s DAWN, America faces what appears to be the most challenging decade of its existence.

Very close to our hearts and minds is the fate of the 50 American hostages in Iran; looming beyond, but still prominent in our concerns, is the state of the economy and the spirit of our nation, both of which appear battered and resilient, at once.

These thoughts are conveyed to every member of Congress in letters, phone calls and visits. As a representative body, the Congress itself is grappling with these difficult problems and searching for answers that do not depend on the tired formulas of yesterday, but that do promise to safeguard this nation's heritage and greatness.

IN THE PAST, THE Congress and the nation relied on "quick-fix" answers to difficult problems of poverty, education, inflation, and defense.

More money was thought to be the best way to insure the success of a program and Congress and administrations devoted their time to thinking up new programs to solve old problems, rather than to improving existing ones or eliminating ineffective ones.

This time has come to an end. If the '70s represent anything, it is that we have come to the "end of the rope" in a number of areas. The nation can no longer postpone, it can no longer spend, it can no longer delay the tough responses needed to meet the challenges of energy, the economy and foreign policy. There are limits beyond which we can no longer go ... limits in energy supplies, limits in the level of federal spending, and limits in what we can do to irreplaceable resources such as the environment.

FOR THE FIRST TIME in decades, the Congress is passing fewer new laws than prior Congresses, according to the Library of Congress. More importantly, the Library also reports that the Congress is doing more oversight of programs than ever before—oversight activities in the 96th Congress are up 50 percent from the 94th Congress, 25 percent from the 95th.

This is an important change in the way Congress and the country do business and try to solve the nation's problems.

However, even in the age of limits, there is room for new initiatives and bold approaches to tough issues.

IN ENERGY, THIS NATION must commit itself in the '80s to two basic goals: greater alternative sources of fuel and conservation.

There is simply no choice but for this nation to become independent of foreign sources of energy. The fact that we are 50 percent dependent on foreign oil today dominates our foreign policy, our economy, our trade deficit, our inflation rate, and our energy supplies.

Congress has begun to move in the right direction. A windfall profits tax will hopefully provide needed funds for mass transit, low-income energy assistance and new energy initiatives.

Congress had adopted new legislation giving the President standby emergency rationing authority and providing for the establishment of conservation programs.

The House has also acted to increase the acreage available for geothermal leases on federal lands and increased funding for solar, wind and gasohol research and development.

Both houses passed bills providing for standby temperature restrictions in non-residential buildings and tax credits for energy loss prevention as a means of stimulating energy conservation.

More remains to be done. But as we move forward to develop new energy resources, we must also be mindful of preserving the very environment that protects life itself.

THE PASSAGE OF AN Energy Mobilization Board with power to override laws that have been adopted by federal and local government to protect the health and welfare of people is a dangerous precedent.

The creation of this additional bureaucracy in Washington implies that we cannot have new resources without destroying or sacrificing old resources.

Surely, this nation's commitment to needed energy, resources need not—indeed, must not—imply that we in the 16th District must accept off-shore oil drilling or the presence of huge super-tankers along our coastline. Our quality of life is dependent not just on lights going on but on preserving the unique beauty of this area.

THE ECONOMY WILL also present us with new challenges in the '80s.

Recent months have seen the dollar plummet and inflation surge, and millions of Americans are deeply concerned about survival itself, especially those living on fixed incomes.

Obviously, the factors that contribute to a nation's economic well-being are so complex and interrelated that it is difficult to find simple solutions. The responsibility lies with businesses and workers, banks and the Federal Reserve, the administration and the international community.

FOR THE CONGRESS, it seems to me there should be two goals: to balance the federal budget and to stimulate new approaches to productivity in our economy. Here, too, the Congress has made some progress.

This year, Congress approved a budget with a deficit that was $3 billion lower than the Administration's proposed budget, lower than that of the past year, and less than one-half the size of the deficit during 1976.

While not yet a balanced budget, the budget for the current fiscal year represents essentially a "no-growth" budget. But the problem is that more than 75 percent of the budget is what is termed "uncontrollable."

Various entitlement programs and defense commitments are no longer subject to annual review by the Congress. To bring these programs under control, it is essential that the Congress improve its oversight responsibility and establish some permanent spending restraints.

THE CHAIRMAN OF THE House Budget Committee and I have introduced legislation to limit direct spending and tax expenditures to a set percentage of the Gross National Product each year.

This would establish an overall ceiling to federal spending and force a debate on national priorities.

In addition, policies should be implemented which stimulate capital investment and productivity in our economy. The federal government must not direct its resources to bailing out bankrupt corporations but to providing tax incentives to new businesses and new investments essential to a vibrant economy.

THE EVENTS IN IRAN and elsewhere around the world, concerns about energy and inflation suggest that the '80s will not be an easy time for us at the national level. They will not be easy at the local level, either.

For our area will have to also face tough decisions in weighing the pressures of growth versus the need to preserve the beauty that is this area. The reality is that we have reached the "end of the rope."

Many groups and individuals still expect that we can avoid the tough decisions, and that we can have the best of all worlds in everything. That simply is no longer the case.

There will have to be better planning and needed funds if we are to protect our farm lands, our coastline, our unique natural resources.

THE MEASURE OF OUR success in the '80s and beyond will be the degree of our adjustment to the limits we face.

It will mean that elected officials will have to speak out and willingly explain these limits to constituents, rather than giving in to pressure groups.

It will mean that interest groups and their supporters will perhaps have to readjust their expectations.

It will mean that industries and individuals, state and local governments cannot rely on the federal government to bail everyone out of their mistakes or failures.

It will mean an acceptance by the American public that it is their responsibility to face these challenges along with government.

I am convinced that this democracy can survive. If we are blessed with good leadership, with commitment and the kind of common sense that has served this country so well, we can look forward to a prosperous and secure new decade for our community and our nation.

CVPOA needs help to continue fight to preserve Valley

By DOUGLAS DESPARD

President, Carmel Valley Property Owners Association

I LOOK BACK AT our efforts over the past years with some pride, not with satisfaction or with the thought of accomplishment, but with the knowledge that we have done our very best. Therefore, I will not discuss the past. Rather, I will try to impress upon you the importance of sharing an interest in our Valley.

We now have over 1,000 members; members who are willing to send us their dues, but unfortunately in some cases, nothing more. We need volunteers—yes, we can always use money, but that is not our only need. We want your concern, your input, your time in dealing with the multitude of problems facing us

As one of the most beautiful spots left on this earth, Carmel Valley has already felt the impact of the developers. They will come in increasing numbers once they have overcrowded the remaining spots left to them. How shall we handle the great demand on our air quality, our water supply, our already overcrowded Carmel Valley Road, our over-burdened sanitary treatment plant?

WE IN THE CVPOA should be the spokesmen for the marjority of the residents in whose interest our efforts should be directed.

Nature Conservancy in its September news release has an editorial I'd like to quote in part:

Preservationists have their work cut out. They have to change the public's perception of preservation as being aesthetic or academic in nature. On the other hand, we have to fight the image promoted by developers that we are "obstructionists" and "anti-progress" and that we hurt a community's chance for a new and better life.

Preservationists have a continuing responsibility to speak out in support of our objectives, despite the apparent strength of the opposition. We must show that we are trying, not to stop change, but to control it before it controls us.

I'm asking that you think about this quotation.

IF YOU BELIEVE that we, the residents of Carmel Valley, should control the changes that are coming, then ask yourself how you can help. Don't wait until there is no more water, no room for your car on Carmel Valley Road, sanitary lines running throughout the Valley, etc., etc.

Are you willing to listen and to try to understand our water problems? Attend the water management district meetings at 7:30 p.m. on the second Monday of each month at the Monterey City Hall?

How about sanitation? The Carmel Sanitary District board meets at 2 p.m. on the third Thursday of each month in the Carmel City Hall.

The Monterey Bay Unified Air Pollution Control District board meets monthly, and its decisions control the quality of the air we breathe.

Our traffic situation needs attention and we are getting a group together to address these problems.

CERTAINLY THE SINGLE most important undertaking during the past decade was the formation of the Carmel Valley Master Plan Study Committee. We were instrumental in getting behind this project, not only by contributing $1,000, but more importantly volunteering the work of three of our board members to the study committee.

After 2½ years of hard work, the committee presented its study to the planning commission. This group has recommended a good many changes, a few of which we disagreed with.

Now the plan is before the supervisors for final approval. Please take the time to review these changes and attend the supervisors hearing on Jan. 15 at 3 p.m. when final approval is expected.

We need you! Will you help? Write to us at CVPOA, Box 157, Carmel Valley, CA 939234 and tell us what you'll do. Thank you.

70s period of great growth for county symphony

By PATRICIA TOTTEN

Manager, Monterey County Symphony Association

THE MONTEREY COUNTY Symphony Association looks back on the 1970s as a period of great growth, both in audience development and professional excellence.

Guided by conductor and music director Haymo Taeuber, the orchestra achieved metropolitan status, and is now rated as one of the top 100 metropolitan symphony orchestras in the country by the American Symphony Orchestra League.

Accorded continuing community support and enthusiasm, the Symphony performs to a sold-out house on a season subscription basis at Sunset Theatre, Carmel; to a virtually sold-out house at King Hall, Monterey, and to an ever-growing audience at Sherwood Hall in Salinas.

WE LOOK FORWARD to the 1980s as an opportunity to build for the future and to bring to the people of Monterey County the excellence of classical music performed by guest artists of world acclaim.

Aided by a grant from the Maurine Church Coburn Charitable Trust, the coming year will provide such esteemed artists as Ruggiero Ricci, violinist, pianists Eugene Istomin and Horacio Gutierrez, and French hornist Barry Tuckwell.

In addition, Nicanor Zabaleta, famed for decades as an internationally renowned harpist, will return for a performance with the orchestra in February, and the symphony will join in concert with the Monterey Peninsula Choral Society in March with soprano Louise Pearl.

IN CONJUNCTION WITH a grant from the California Arts Council, the symphony has planned two additional performances in King City on April 17 when the South County will enjoy an afternoon concert for its young people and an evening concert featuring Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and a solo appearance by orchestra tympanist Greg Janusz in Fantasy on Japanese Wood Prints, op. 211, for Xylophone and Orchestra by Alan Hovhaness.

We envision for the Monterey County Symphony a decade of cultural enrichment for the community; of growth and expansion; of bringing to you the finest soloists available worldwide, and always continuing musical satisfaction.

Active spirit growing in CV, Carmel

By ARTHUR STRUM Student Body President Carmel High School

Now, AT THE BEGINNING of the new decade, I look back with mixed emotions at the past 10 years.

The people of Carmel Valley and Carmel seem to have a more active spirit. More and more interested citizens have begun to let their voices be heard in community affairs, such as the Rancho Canada Lodge issue and the Carmel annexation initiative.

This sort of participation is of paramount importance. For us to have any control over the Carmel City Council or the Monterey County Board of Supervisors, we must exert pressure on each member that represents us.

THAT THE TWO ISSUES I mentioned earlier were not resolved in the best interests of the people, as I believe they were not, demonstrates that even the kind of new voter awareness and concern that was evidenced in the '70s was not enough to ensure the fulfillment of our most important need: good government. Why not? Because possibly even more important than voter participation is the need for each citizen to know when an issue has a long-term benefit.

By voting against annexation to Carmel right after the Monterey County Board of Supervisors went against almost every resident's wish in giving the go-ahead to Nick Lombardo's Rancho Canada Lodge, the citizenry of greater Carmel showed a regrettable lack of vision.

Since the county board refused to grant what residents in this area wish, one would expect them to welcome the chance to be governed by locals, the Carmel City Council, especially since this would provide a greater base from which to draw candidates.

In order to fight the inevitable misrepresentation that occurs when people on the board from as far away as King City decide our issues, those who do not favor annexation must incorporate themselves in the '80s. In this way the residents of Carmel and Carmel Valley will have control over the interests concerning us all, one of which must certainly be the preservation of our tremendous scenic beauty.

FIND IT IMPOSSIBLE to predict what the '80s might bring for Carmel and Carmel Valley, because the important questions will not be local or national ones.

In the next decade the world will ponder the question of survival of the human race. In the face of overpopulation, nuclear proliferation, pollution and scarcity of materials with which we feed our industrial society, we in this area, and all of us in the world, must decide to use less, discard less and think more about the solutions to these problems.

If we can rid ourselves of selfishness and resign ourselves to fewer comforts, and if we can forget our petty squabbles on the local, national and international scenes, then we can unite in stopping our own stampede to extinction.

Such is the challenge presented to us in this new decade.

Citizens Committee seeks to preserve residential character of Carmel

By WILLIAM DOOLITTLE President Carmel Citizens Committee

THE DECADE OF THE seventies will be remembered by the Carmel area west of Highway 1 as a period of compromises and limitations.

With both the business district and residential areas having reached nearly their full saturation level, the citizens of the community have had to learn to grapple with the inevitable problems associated with a limited supply of land and ever increasing demand for its usage.

Most communities would have permitted their business communities to gradually expand into their surrounding residential areas, but we are fortunate in Carmel to have basically strong zoning laws which have inhibited the expansion of the business district.

AS WE WITNESSED IN the past decade, strict zoning laws have created some unfortunate side effects. Because of the unique attraction and character of the entire area, we have experienced a phenomenal growth both in terms of the actual number of visitors, but also from the standpoint of the pressures from the establishment of new businesses.

Combining these two elements of demand with the restrictive zoning laws has led to unbelievable rent and lease increases, not to mention property values.

Until the passage of Proposition 13 in 1978, the rapid rise in real estate values in the 1970s was great for speculators and financially independent homeowners, but these increases were forcing taxes up to the point where numerous long-established moderate-income residents were being forced to sell their homes because of the property tax burden.

WHAT THE CITIZENS OF this community often fail to realize is the highly delicate balance which continues to exist between the commercial and residential interests.

Residents often overlook the fact that more than one-half of the city of Carmel's revenue comes from visitor-oriented sources (sales and hostlery taxes). On the other hand, merchants often ignore the fact that tourists visit Carmel because of its well-known and priceless scenic, cultural and predominately residential character.

It is this important matter of balance and preservation which the Carmel Citizens Committee has addressed itself to since it was founded 21 years ago.

AS WE ENTER THE 1980s, the Carmel Citizens Committee believes that the two most influential factors that will affect our area in the next decade will come from constant inflationary pressures and changing demographic patterns.

With inflation likely to continue at a minimum rate of 6 to 8 percent per year, prices will double again by 1990. This will force homeowners and property owners alike to raise their "asking" prices in order to obtain a "higher rate of return" on their businesses or property.

With the median priced home in the Carriel area (approximately $165,000) already selling at ove. twice the national average, it is going to become increasingly difficult for young families and moderate-income individuals to move to or stay in this area.

Unfortunately, civic leaders, local politicians, and even citizen groups, like the Carmel Citizens Committee, will have very little influence in controlling these two very critical factors facing our community in the 1980s.

HOWEVER, LOCAL SOLUTIONS can and will have to be made with respect to such matters at the Highway 1 traffic congestion, more efficient transportation and parking solutions and housing needs for the elderly.

The Carmel Citizens Committee will continue to insist that "up-zoning" not be permitted in order to foster, protect and preserve the predominantly residential character of the Carmel

70s were good to Carmel Foundation

By BETTY PLANK

Executive Director, Carmel Foundation

THE PAST DECADE HAS brought an ever-widening circle of friends to the Carmel Foundation. . An unexpected and very generous bequest from Miss Constance Diment made possible the construction of new facilities, located at the corner of Eighth and Lincoln streets, which were completed in 1975.

As a result of this, the Foundation has been able to increase the number and variety of its classes, programs and social events for the elderly of Carmel and the surrounding areas.

The functions of its Home Service Department have expanded and the Foundation has been able to continue the operation and maintenance of 21 apartment units for qualified seniors.

THE FOUNDATION TAKES pride in its uniqueness. It is supported entirely by the generosity of friends through donations and bequests. Not only individual friends but many local service organizations as well are liberal in their contributions.

The Foundation receives no federal, state, county or city funding.

The annual budget, which operates at a deficit, is roughly one quarter the size of the budget of comparable senior citizen centers funded by government agencies.

The Foundation functions under the direction of a 21 member board of directors, all of whom live in or near Carmel. It operates with a very small professional staff which is ably assisted by many volunteers who contribute their time, energy and talents in a wide variety of ways.

THESE SIMPLE WORDS hold as true today and for the next decade as they did when written long ago:

The Carmel Foundation functions with the spirit and concern of a good and thoughtful neighbor. It has no message to deliver, no creed to preach, no political theory to defend. It strives to bring into the lives of its friends, a measure of dignity, serenity, comfort and companionship.

* The Carmel Foundation extends a heartfelt "thank you" to its many friends as we all look forward to furthering our Adventure in Neighborliness.

WINDS DURING THE storm Dec. 23 toppled a tree against the footbridge that spans the Carmel River next to the Carmel Sanitary District sewage treatment plant. District Manager Michael Zambory said that the tree did not damage the 3/4-inch steel cables that support the bridge, but the storm caused other serious problems for the treatment plant. (George T.C. Smith photo)

'No health hazard'

Big spill at treatment plant

WHEN A POWER blackout struck the Monterey Peninsula during the Dec. 23 storm the auxiliary diesel generator at the Carmel Sanitary District sewage treatment plant failed to start.

Two million gallons of treated effluent overflowed from treatment tanks while a crew worked five hours to repair the eight-cylinder engine.

By the time power was restored, and effluent once again began to pump into the outfall line into Carmel Bay, the spill had spread eight inches deep over eight acres around the treatment plant.

COUNTY AND STATE officials were called to the plant as soon as the effluent began overflowing. According to district manager Michael Zambory, the officials found that no health hazard resulted from the spill.

Zambory filed a written report of the incident last week.

"The lights went out at 4 p.m. on Sunday.

We hooked our portable generator to the influent pump station so that no raw sewage was dumped into the Carmel River," he said. The spill was secondarily treated effluent that is normally discharged into the bay.

SEWAGE PUMPED INTO the plant is gravity-fed through the treatment tanks, Zambory said, but there was no electricity for the pumps that carry the treated effluent through the outfall line to the bay.

"The stationary generator didn't kick on," he said, to power the outfall pumps. "Treated effluent spilled out of the secondary clarifier onto our lawn, then flowed into the woods on our property next to the plant."

REPEATED ATTEMPTS to start the diesel engine were unsuccessful. Zambory said, until mechanics isolated the problem in a fuel valve. The electrical coil in the fuel valve was replaced and the engine started.

Full power and normal operation at the plant were restored by 10 p.m. Monday, Dec.

Zambory said that the power outage cost the district $1,500 in overtime pay for employees and for repair charges.

APRIL

I HERE USED TO BE a saying about the torture of "being nibbled to death by ducks." That seems to be the intent of the ad hoc quacks. They'll keep nibbling away at our city administrator and Carmel will be tortured to death.

MAY

There once was a councilman named Brunn, Who cried, "These late hours are my ruin. These verbacious oafs, Aren't even telling jokes, Just singing the same old tune."

I had a dream the other night. I was walking drift-aly through the mist, with the candle-glow lights shining through the trees. All the houses looked warm and smiley, tucked beneath their pine needle covers in their grapestaked poster beds. The waves in Carmel Bay sang a lullaby: "Shush, shush, my little town. Shush, my little town, sleep," with the rhythm of a rocking mother. A possum peeked at me from his high perch, and Grandfather Raccoon lumbered across the street, grumbling about his grubs. The eucalyptus smell was strong, clearing my head ... but I smelled new things as I passed each house...

JUNE

CARMEL WAS ASLEEP. Quiet and resting. Ah, but my dream is a reality.

(Comments about council meetings.) "We shall fight them on the beaches, we shall fight them among the cypress, we shall fight them along the grapestakes and in the streets, we shall fight up Carmel Hill; we shall never surrender." And never in the field of Carmel politics was so much done to so many by so

"The King and his council met once again. Barely into the proceedings, the King banished his subjects into the cold night air - not even allowing them to stay within the castle keep — while knaves and knights battled in secret. The knights lost; the knaves won. And the counselor was treated with disdain.

But, in time, all Kings lose their thrones. And it will come to pass; for the people will rise up against those who oppress them and will put them out of power."

And so it happened that three unwise men came out of the West, following their own star, bearing gifts of power, greed, and spite; and they laid them before the people who were blinded for a time by the eloquence and dazzling words.

But time and common sense prevailed, and the veil fell from the people's eyes. And, lo!, they beheld the truth, and turned them forth into the wilderness.

JULY

Y ES. THAT'S RIGHT. Nowhere is there such a town as Carmel. Home to a few thousand people; wished-for-home to hundreds of thousands of others. Fairytale land to some; unusual shopping mecca to others; one of the world's most beautiful beaches to all. Sometimes we Carmelites tend to lose sight of our town and what really makes it so special.

It's not really the stores or houses. It's not the unique shops or the forest of trees. Comstock architecture or board-and-batt. grapestake fences or stucco wall, or gingerbread. It's none of these.

It's the people. That is what makes Carmel a jewel. It's people...

To find someone like Bob Griggs Would take a heck of a lot of digs. His planning concern, Isn't something you learn Studying books while eating figs.

AUGUST

LAST MONDAY NIGHT, the proof was with the people. And once more, the majority of the council members held themselves above the voice of the people, with petty excuses. Be that as it may, when Nov. 6th comes, and the votes are counted, the council will have to heed the people, for they will have spoken, and their voices will ring forth throughout this fair town. "WE ARE HERE! WE ARE HERE! WE ARE HERE!"

Don't know where the time goes. Finally got around to getting some planting done in the garden that should have been accomplished last May. But it just WAS May! There are just too many things to do here in Carmel. If we need any emergency ordinances, they should be to make each day 48 hours long, so that we can do what we want, do what needs doing, and still have enough time to sleep to keep up with it all.

SEPTEMBER

"RALLY 'ROUND THE corner grocery, boys!" And they did, and Bruno's market will continue as Bruno's: Vince, Judy, et all.

Willy-nilly, Piccadilly. It's so silly With no lily.

Whenever I walk to Carmel along the Flanders track I go by a poor old mansion with its shingles, broken and black. I suppose I've passed it a hundred times, but I always stop for a minute To look at the house, the tragic house, the house with nobody in it.

OCTOBER

ONE RENT-GOUGING landlord does not a rent moratorium make; One large house does not a second-story ban make; One second-story retail business failure does not an apartments-only ordinance make; One advisory vote on salaries does not a sticking opinion make; One advisory vote on Piccadilly does not an eminent domain make: One Mayor's opinion should not a council majority make.

Half a mile, half a mile, Half a mile onward, All in the Valley of Carmel Rode the six hundred....

Helen Arnold is one of the few members of the council who really does her "homework." She actually reads the packets, rather than rely on staff or 'people' for her information.

I assume you realize that if a seated councilman runs for mayor, and wins, he or she then has the authority to immediately appoint someone to fill his seat. Think about

NOVEMBER

Now THAT WE'VE all voted - smile at your neighbor again and prepare yourself for the next one!

The mayor seemed to think that "all the wrong people voted."

Oh, somewhere in this favored land the sun is shining bright, The band is playing somewhere, and somewhere hearts are light; And somewhere men are laughing, and somewhere children shout,

And there is great joy in Carmel: Mighty Brown has stuck out.

DECEMBER

DEAR SANTA: Please bring me ... nothing. You already gave me Carmel.

'Twas the night before Christmas When all through the town But I heard him exclaim, ere he went from my view, "For Ordinance 77-22, my Thanks to all of you."

Agencies disagree on design, purpose of project

Debate continues on new dam for Carmel River

By STEVE HELLMAN

FEDERAL, STATE AND local agencies are still eyeing upper Carmel Valley as the site for a large new dam that would dwarf the existing Los Padres and Sam Clemente dams.

The divergent plans stem from the need for increased water supply, flood control and protection of the steelhead trout population in the Carmel River.

THE U.S. ARMY CORPS of Engineers proposes a 400-foot high earthfill dam that would be built just downstream from the 85-foot high San Clemente Dam.

The Corps' dam, first unveiled in a 1977 study, would contain 97,500 acre-feet of water, inundating the 1,200 acrefoot San Clemente Reservoir. This massive dam would be located four miles above Carmel Valley Village.

Nearly half the reservoir capacity behind the dam would be reserved for flood control. Another 17,000 acre-feet per year would be provided for increased water yield, according to the Corps' report. (Estimated water use for the Monterey Peninsula is 15,000 acre-feet per year.)

Initially planned for construction in two stages at an estimated 1977 cost of $97 million, design of the dam failed to win the approval of the Corps' San Francisco district office. Local taxpayers, therefore, would have had to provide $86 million for the project, while the $11 million balance would have been paid by the federal government.

Corps engineers are currently revising the design of the project to meet new seismic safety standards and a better costeffectiveness ratio.

On Jan. 15, Romaine Repair, chief of special studies for the Corps, will present an oral report on the Corps dam plan to the board of directors of the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District.

DIRECTORS OF THE water management district agreed at their Dec. 10 meeting to move forward with a plan of their own for a "locally funded, single-purpose dam."

The primary concern of the directors, who are establishing a water allocation system for the Peninsula, is to provide a larger water storage facility to meet the area's demand for more

Sacramento consulting engineer Clifford J. Cortright presented a study that concludes it would be more feasible to build a larger dam downstream from the San Clemente Reservoir than to raise Los Padres or San Clemente dams for increased water supply. San Clemente Dam is located at the juncture of San Clemente Creek and Carmel River, a little more than four miles above Carmel Valley Village. Los Padres Dam, 148 feet high, is situated on the river six miles above San Clemente Dam.

CORTRIGHT PROPOSES that the district build a concrete, gravity-fed dam below the San Clemente Reservoir at the same site selected by the Corps. His 220-foot high dam, however, would be half the height of the Corps' and would be designed only for water storage.

Since it is not meant for flood control (it would fill immediately at the start of each winter), Cortright's dam is not eligible for federal funding, and would have to be financed by local taxpayers.

Although Cortright's preliminary estimate for construction of the dam is $11 million, this might only be one-fourth of the actual cost.

THE STATE FISH AND Game Department would settle for a less ambitious dam than the Corps proposes, but according to local field supervisor Mike Johnson, the department would not support the water district's dam unless it provides a continuous water flow for the Carmel River.

Johnson said that the state will not support any dam unless it releases water for the steelhead trout that migrate upstream each year from the ocean to spawn in the river's headwaters. The river is dry during the summer months, limiting the migrations to the months between December and April. If a dam is built so high that the steelhead cannot swim over it, the state will require that a fish hatchery be constructed below the dam, Johnson said.

"WE'RE NOT REALLY for or against a dam," Johnson said. "But we become concerned as soon as there's going to be an impact on wildlife and fish." His agency could halt a dam project, Johnson said, if it would pose significant danger to the steelhead.

Land might also have to be donated to compensate for wildlife habitat that is flooded by the dam, but the major requirement is for year-round water releases to sustain the flow of the river, Johnson said.

The Corps and his agency have reached an impasse, Johnson said, on what is reasonable for the water releases. He also said of the Corps' proposal: "The cost benefit is not so good. There wouldn't be a lot of flood control because 50 percent of the river flow comes in below the dam." He said that he would wait to see a final proposal from the water management district.

HE MONTEREY COUNTY Board of Supervisors called on the Corps for its study immediately after the devastating

THE 85-FOOT-HIGH San Clemente Dam on the Carmel - Carmel Valley Village. The agencies, however, disagree on the River should be replaced with a 400-foot-high earthfill dam, according to a study by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers. The Corps, along with state and local agencies, is considering the feasibility of constructing a larger dam downstream from the San Clemente Dam, which is located four miles above flood of January 1969.

In the study released in May of 1977, the Corps outlines the effects of the major floods in 1911, 1955, 1958 and 1969. Floodwaters in the Valley in 1969 alone caused an estimated $1.5 million in property damage, according to the study.

The study notes that the concrete-arch San Clemente Dam (built in 1921) and the earthfill, 148-foot high Los Padres Dam (built in 1948) are only "water supply reservoirs of relatively small capacities."

It also states: "No extensive works for control of floods have been constructed in Carmel Valley where flood damages have been the most severe." Some levees have been constructed as "localized" measures against flooding, it notes.

The 129-page Corps study concludes that a 400-foot high earthfill dam is needed to contain 97,500 acre-feet of water. Of the total storage capacity, 42,000 acre-feet would be reserved for flood control.

"The remaining storage," the study states, "is required for releases for fishery flows in addition to 17,000 acre-feet of supplemental water supply."

Filled to its spillway crest, the dam would inundate 800 acres. The reservoir would extend 4.5 miles upstream. The existing reservoir is about two miles long.

THE INITIAL STAGE of construction for flood control, water supply and recreation would cost $70 million. A second stage, added on solely by demand for increased water supply would cost $27.5 million.

Average annual benefits of the $97.5 million dam, according to the study, would be: $873,000 in flood control; $5.4 million in water supply, and $37,000 from recreation.

Total cost of the project that is apportioned to the federal government for flood control and recreation is $11.5 million. The locally generated funding for water supply would have to be $86 million.

The Corps' latest proposal is essentially the same as this initial plan, but with revised cost figures, according to Corps chief Repair.

Repair said in a telephone interview last week: "We're taking a hard look at figures and the economic feasibility of this project." He said that a proposal will be presented to the water management district for its review in April.

WHILE THE WATER management district is considering a much more modest dam that would be built solely for water supply, Repair said that the Corps is involved in building dams primarily for flood control.

"For the Corps to participate, the dam has to provide flood control," Repair said. He noted, however, that the Corps has no authority to halt construction of a locally funded dam.

"WE'RE NOT RULING OUT the Corps project," said Bruce Buel, manager of the water management district. "But we know we can build a smaller, locally funded dam for our purposes."

With increased water supply as the main objective, Buel said that Cortright's proposed 200-foot high San Clemente Dam would increase water storage capacity from 1,200 to 18,000 acre-feet per year.

The San Clemente site is located in a "seismically active region," lying within 25 miles of the San Andres Fault, Cortright notes. But he maintains that the possibility of a maximum intensity earthquake in the area does not preclude construction of a concrete or earth embankment dam of the size that he contemplates.

A PRELIMINARY COST estimate, that Cortright based on 1976 prices, puts construction of the 220-foot high concrete dam at $11 million.

This dam, financed by local taxpayers, would provide the water management district with 18,000 acre-feet of water supply. The cost to taxpayers for 17,000 acre-feet under the Corps' plan would be $86 million.

Acknowledging the difference in costs, Buel said that Cortright's report contains a "very rough estimate that is not based on actual design." He cautioned that the district's idea Continued on next page for a dam would probably cost more than $11 million.

CORTRIGHT'S PROPOSED dam is similar to one recommended in 1978 by the precursor to the water management district, the Zone II Water Advisory Committee, at an estimated (1976) cost of $44.8 million.

The Zone II committee endorsed a dam that would yield from 19,000 to 21,000 acre-feet per year. According to Edwin Lee, a member of the committee, this yield could be obtained from a dam with a capacity of 33,000 acre-feet.

It was noted at the time that the Corps' $97.5 million dam, with a capacity of 97,500 acre-feet, would yield only 17,000 acre-feet per year to Peninsula water users.

I INANCING FOR A dam, according to Buel, would come either from bonds sold by the water district or through direct sales of water.

According to Clyde McDonald, attorney for the state underground water supply. The charge would be implemented Legislature's Water, Parks and Wildlife Committee, a bond issue would be financed either through fees charged to landowners who will benefit from the dam, or through a sales tax levied against all local residents and landowners within the district. The fee system could be established partly through metering and registration of private wells that would derive more groundwater as a result of the dam.

Los Padres and San Clemente reservoirs are owned by California-American Water Company. Cal-Am's chief executive, Pete O'Day, opposes the construction of a dam that would flood the existing San Clemente Reservoir. He favors drilling more wells to meet the water demand.

Buel said, "Water behind a new dam would be partially owned by Cal-Am and by the district. We could keep track of the water rights, or wholesale the water to Cal-Am. Either way we're going to sell water if we build a dam."

The district, Buel said, could charge private well owners for water on the basis that the dam would increase the available underground water supply. The charge would be implemented through a program of well metering and registration.

FEDERAL FUNDING WOULD not be available for the district's proposed dam because it is not designed for flood control. But Buel said that "the value of the locally funded dam is that it can be built at a lower cost for the single-purpose of water supply.

"The bottom line," he said, "is increased water supply."
He cited as examples the San Antonio and Nacimiento reservoirs in southern Monterey County. And a new San Clemente Dam, Buel insisted, could meet the requirements on the state Fish and Game Department for release flow.

Water district director John Williams praised the "thoroughness" of Cortright's report, but he said that the district should further assess the financial feasibility of the dam.

Board president William Gianelli cautioned that any preliminary study of financing would have to wait until the district made an exact determination of the costs and the design of the dam.

First migration in four years expected this winter

Drought reduced steelhead population

By STEVE HELLMAN

THE STEELHEAD POPULATION of the Carmel River has been hard hit since the 1976-77 drought, according to a study prepared in November by fishery consultant Robert Lewis. There has not been a steelhead migration in the Carmel River since the drought and the 1977 Marble-Cone fire.

This could be the first winter in four years that steelhead will migrate from the ocean to spawn in the river's headwaters.

In normal years, according to Lewis, an estimated 2,000 adult steelhead will ascend the river to spawn between December and April.

THE STEELHEAD IS born in freshwater streams like the Carmel River. It migrates downstream to live in the ocean where it loses its rainbow colors, turning into the silver-hued steelhead.

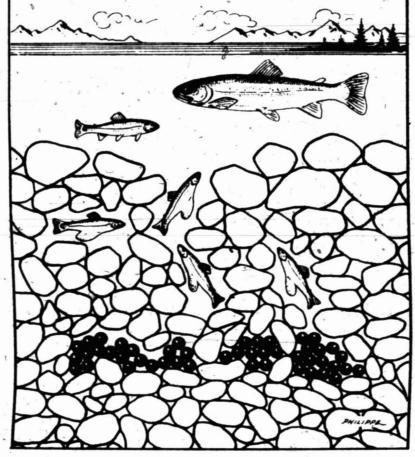

This migratory lifestyle is the basis for the steelhead's Latin designation anadromous, which means "pushing up."

Migration also exposes the steelhead to manmade obstacles and natural events like drought and siltation caused by erosion.

Siltation resulting from the 175,000-acre Marble-Cone blaze prevented the "fish ladder" at San Clemente Dam from being operated, according to Lewis' study dated Nov. 26.

THE 77-FOOT FISH ladder allows the steelhead to swim over the concrete dam, and to continue upriver to spawn in the headwaters. Lewis states that in a normal year 90 percent of the steelhead ascend the fish ladder, while 10 percent spawn below the dam.

Lewis, who was retained by the Monterey Peninsula Water Management District to prepare the study, STEELHEAD EGGS ARE buried in the gravel of a streambed, several inches beneath the surface. The fry remain in the spaces between the gravel until the yolk sac is absorbed. At that time they work their way up to the surface and escape.

concludes that construction of a larger dam on the Carmel River would have a "detrimental effect on the steelhead population."

He refers to the 440-foot-high dam proposed by the U.S., Army Corps of Engineers on a site below San Clemente Dam and the 220-foot-high version considered by the water management district for the same location.

He states that "any of the proposed dams would prevent adult steelhead from migrating above the San Clemente Dam for spawning."

LEWIS ECHOES THE demand by the state Fish and Game Department for a fish hatchery to be built below any proposed dam.

"The hatchery would have to produce 200,000 yearling steelhead annually," Lewis states, "to maintain a migratory run of about 2,000 adults." A hatchery would be part of the dam project.

Enough water would also have to be released from any new dam to provide a continuous flow in the river during the December to April migration period, and for the downstream run from April through July. Lesser flows would have to be sustained throughout the remainder of the year, Lewis states.

ADDITIONAL STUDIES ARE needed to determine the exact size of the steelhead population and the flow requirements, Lewis states in his recommendations to the directors of the water management district.

The directors accepted Lewis' report at their Dec. 10 meeting, voting to purchase a $2,500 fish counter which will be operated by the Fish and Game Department.

Director William Woodworth objected to the purchase, saying Fish and Game should buy the device because the fish are the responsibility of that agency and not the water management district.

Bruce Buel, manager of the water management district, defended the purchase. He said that the fish counter was the first step toward the mitigation measures for the steelhead that will have to be considered in the district's dam project.

MIKE JOHNSON, local field supervisor for the Fish and Game Department, said that flow studies and the fish counter were "definitely needed."

"We're not really for or against a dam until we know whether there's going to be an impact on wildlife and the fish," Johnson said.

He agreed with Lewis that water releases for sustained flow in the river would be a requirement of any new dam, but he said the precise amount of those flows will depend on data that is yet to be collected.

IF THERE IS A new dam, we assume it would create a continual flow of some type," said Rich Hughett, a member of the Carmel River Coalition.

Although his group is divided on the issue of a new dam, Hughett said, "All of us want a river reestablished." Diversions and piping, he said, are two alternatives that the coalition unanimously supports.

Hughett, who was a member of the now disbanded Carmel River Steelhead Association, said that flows are necessary to "attract the steelhead and to assist their migrations."

It takes the steelhead four to five days to complete the upstream migration, Hughett said. He claimed that the fish ladder at San Clemente dam is the "highest in the West."

A LARGER DAM WOULD have to include a downstream hatchery, he said. The only other alternative, an egg-taking station, allows ichthyologists to fertilize steelhead eggs and raise the fingerlings in other hatcheries.

The danger of an egg-taking station, according to Hughett, is the possibility that steelhead strains will be mixed.

"We have a limited number of steelhead in the Carmel River, but it's a strong strain," Hughett said. Lewis stated in his study that fishermen catch only about 2 percent of the steelheads that migrate upstream each winter.

Steelhead fishing regulations are strict

STRICT REGULATIONS limit the season and days anglers can fish for steelhead in the Carmel River, as well as the kind of gear they can use.

According to Paul Chappell, state Fish and Game Department official, the season runs from Nov. 16 to the last day in February.

Wednesday, Saturday, Sunday, legal holidays and the first and last day of the season are the only days in the season that steelhead fishing is allowed in Monterey County, he said.

The limit is two steelhead per day; the size is not restricted.

CHAPPELL SAID, "GEAR restrictions prohibit treble hooks, and weights cannot be less than 18 inches from the hook." Treble hooks are used to snag the steelhead in the side, a tempting but illegal practice since the fish does not feed during its migration.

Steelhead anglers are only allowed to fish between the mouth of the river and Robles Del Rio bridge, Chappell said. Portions of the river above Robles Del Rio, along with San Clemente Reservoir, are designated by law as protected spawning grounds.

FISHING HAS BEEN pretty bad since 1975," said Rich Hughett, a fisherman and a member of the Carmel River Coalition.

He cited the drought as the major reason for the reduction of steelhead in the Carmel River. "There haven't been any returnees; fish haven't gotten up river," he said.

Steelhead rarely strike roe (fish eggs) or worms, Hughett said, "because they don't feed while migrating." The fisherman is limited to using lures, he said, which can create a disturbance in the water that the steelhead will snap at.

The average size steelhead caught in the Carmel River is between eight and 12 pounds, according to Hughett. He said the largest known steelhead taken from the river was 18 pounds.

VERNON HEAD, A retired Air Force colonel and resident of Carmel Meadows, has been elected president of the board of directors of the Carmel Sanitary District.

Head, who was elected by a 3-0 vote of his fellow directors at their Dec. 18 meeting, will serve as president for one

A member of the board since 1977, Head said after his election that his most important task will be to move ahead with the Areawide Facilities Plan.

"Everything in our district centers around the Areawide Facilities Plan," he said. The plan envisions construction of sewer lines in Carmel Valley and Carmel Highlands, implementation of a wastewater reclamation project and major improvements for the sewage treatment plant.

ACKNOWLEDGING THAT the proposed reclamation project has sparked a lot of controversy in recent months, Head said, "It's a good project and I'll continue to support it."

Head also endorses the state designation of Carmel Bay as an Area of Special Biological Significance (ASBS), which led to the proposed reclamation project. The district must halt discharge of effluent into Carmel Bay by 1983 because of the ASBS.

Head has generally voted to support environmental protection measures.

The $13.7 million reclamation project, now in its second stage of planning and design, would include use of treated wastewater on golf courses in Carmel Valley and Del Monte Forest.

Noting the reluctance of some golf course operators to sign agreements, Head observed: "It's a matter of them (the operators) fully understanding the costs and the process of amortization that we're offering."

He referred to the requirements that an operator would pay for the installation of new pipelines on his property and be allowed to deduct the construction expense from the charge for the reclaimed wastewater.

The golf courses are currently irrigated with water from the operators' wells or from the California-American Water Company.

"It (the reclamation project) is going to provide more good water; it's beneficial to the whole Peninsula," he said.

ASKED ABOUT COMMENTS that the purpose of the project is to "free up" additional water for new development, Head replied that it was not the concern of the sanitary district whether growth should be encouraged.

"New development has to do with the county, not us. People should be concerned with the Board of Supervisors it they don't want development," Head said.

WHAT ABOUT THE decision of the Pebble Beach Sanitary District to withdraw from the reclamation project? Head said he could not comment on the dispute since it may be headed for litigation.

Directors of the Pebble Beach Sanitary District have branded the project "impractical." They decided last September to withdraw rather than pay $34,375 as their share of the planning costs.

An $825,000 grant for the $1.1 million planning and design phase was approved last October by the federal Environmental Protection Agency. The state has approved $137,000 as its share for the design cost.

THE CARMEL SANITARY District, which expects to pay $68,750 for its share of the design, warned the Pebble Beach Sanitary District that it is committed to finance part of

Financial squeeze to plague schools in 80s

By FRANCES GAVER Member, Board of Education Carmel Unified School District

Taking a short-range look backward or forward at the state of our schools, one would have to focus first on the challenge of learning to live with sharply limited resources.

The Serrano-Priest decision requiring that we move toward equality of educational resources throughout the state has for several years caused a pinch for schools like Carmel, defined by the state to be "wealthy."

The impact of Proposition 13 added to the Serrano-Priest effect has forced some very difficult decisions, particularly for the current school year. Without the cushion of the reserve fund which helped maintain programs last year, we have found ourselves with fewer dollars in our budget this year than last; given the current inflation rate, our loss in purchasing power has been substantial.

The financial squeeze can be expected to continue next year, leading again to difficult decisions as we wrestle with the legitimate claims of staff for salary increases and of parents for increased programs.

As a new decade begins, however, it is appropriate to take a longer look at the past and the future to try to see where we are in public education in Carmel. With the caveat that I speak only for myself and that my crystal ball is as cloudy as most, I offer the following obervations:

Reviewing the past few years, I think we can feel a sense of satisfaction about our schools.

Although we cannot claim credit for a national trend among young people away from disaffection and apathy, I believe there has been a shift in our students toward more concern with personal achievement and increased pride in our school community.

Also, we have achieved a broadened involvement in the decision-making process. Internally this has taken the form of a management team approach among the superintendent, principals, and other administrators. We have increasingly relied on the advice of committees composed of representatives of affected groups in setting school goals and district policy.

But the proof of the pudding is the success of our graduates. Our district serves a wide diversity of students; some graduates go directly into the labor market, others enroll in vocational training programs, others further their education in four-year colleges, some in the most demanding colleges in the country. It is a source of real satisfaction that we are able to serve such a range of interests and abilities as well as we do.

Looking to the decade ahead, we can discern a number of issues that may have to be addressed. First, what implications do community changes have for our schools? We know that the proportion of children living in single-parent families is increasing dramatically and that increasing numbers of mothers (in both single- and two-parent families) are working full time. What changes, if any, do we need to make in school schedules or school-home interactions?

Who governs? One of the significant impacts of Proin decision power from local school districts to the state. Is this important? Do we really want local control of education? If so, how can we regain our influence?

An example of loss of conposition 13 has been the shift trol is that we have no way to finance badly needed building improvements at Carmel High School until the state Legislature agrees on a method for capital financing.

One partial answer to this problem of local control may lie in the Friends of Carmel Unified Schools (FOCUS), an organization formed last year to help raise private funds for our schools.

The 1980s will allow us to focus anew on what we as a community expect to accomplish through our public schools. At the most elemental level, the function of education, as I see it, is to help new generations take their place as shapers of society. Surely deciding just how we should do this and what the role of public schools should be in the process, deserve our most creative and determined effort.

THE WHITE HOUSE YEARS — the memoirs of Henry Kissinger

Handling a most touchy situation

Part VI-Cuba

(Editor's note: War between the Soviet Union and the United States came closer than ever in the 1962 Cuban missile crisis. John F. Kennedy faced down Nikita Khrushchev, who agreed to withdraw from Cuba Soviet missiles that menaced the American mainland. A similar crisis arose in 1970 when the USSR began a base for its missile submarines at the Cuban port of Cienfuegos. In the sixth of seven excerpts from "White House Years," Henry Kissinger tells how U.S. diplomacy handled a touchy Western Hemisphere situation.)

By HENRY KISSINGER

THROUGHOUT MOST OF THE critical autumn of 1970 the Soviet Union was represented in Washington by a clever, amiable and discreet but quite powerless charge d'affaires, Yuli M. Vorontsov. Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin had been recalled to Moscow for consultations.

On Aug. 4 Vorontsov was bubbling with joviality. He had come to convey his government's desire to reaffirm the Kennedy-Khrushchev understanding of 1962 with respect to Cuba.

I was puzzled and said so. There was no obvious reason why the Soviet Union should raise the question.

There had been news stories, Vorontsov said, about American plans to strengthen the defense of Guantanamo naval base and alleged Soviet military activists in Cuba; he read me a note complaining about stepped-up subversive activities against Cuba by exiles operating from Florida.

There was no formal understanding between President John F. Kennedy and Soviet Chairman Nikita Khrushchev, in the sense of an agreement, either oral or in writing. As I described it to President Nixon:

"The Khrushchev-Kennedy exchanges indicate clearly that there was an implicit understanding that we would agree to give assurances against an invasion of Cuba if the Soviet Union would remove its offensive missiles from Cuba under U.N. observation and would undertake, with suitable safeguards, to halt the re-introduction of such weapons systems into Cuba."

ON AUG. 7 I GAVE Vorontsov our reply. It noted with satisfaction the assurance of the Soviet government that the understandings of 1962 were still in full force. Vorontsov expressed his appreciation.

It is hard to imagine what Vorontsov or his masters could have been thinking.

On Cuba's southern coast there is a port named Cienfuegos. Its harbor can be reached only by a single channel leading to a bay dotted by a number of small islands and surrounded by steep hills. On one of these islands, called Cayo Alcatraz, a U-2 plane on Aug. 26 photographed new construction activity that had not been evident 11 days earlier. All that could be definitely identified was work on a wharf and on some new barracks.

What made it of more than passing significance was another piece of intelligence: a flotilla of Soviet ships was on a course heading toward Cuba; it consisted of a submarine tender, a guided-missile cruiser, a guided-missile destroyer, an ocean-going salvage tug, a heavy salvage ship, a merchant tanker and an amphibious landing ship carrying two 80-foot barges. The submarine tender and the barge were of a type normally used for servicing nuclear submarines.

The Soviet flotilla reached Cienfuegos on Sept. 9. On the following day the merchant tanker joined them. Daily U-2 flights were ordered.

THE CUBAN REACTION to our daily U-2 flights showed that something unusual was afoot. Our first flight on Sept. 14 had to be aborted because MiG fighters scrambled after it. Another mission flying around the periphery of the island was also intercepted and forced to terminate its mission. On Sept. 15 a U.S. Navy anti-submarine aircraft was intercepted and shadowed for 60 miles while the MiG made several strafing passes.

U-2 photography showed that in less than three weeks the Soviet Union had rushed to complete a fairly significant shore installation. Two new barracks and administrative buildings suddenly stood on Cayo Alcatraz, which had been barren only a month earlier.

Recreation facilities had quickly risen on the island, including a basketball court and a soccer field. In my eyes this stamped it indelibly as a Russian base, since as an old soccer fan I knew Cubans played no soccer. More important, the submarine tender was moored in permanent fashion to four buoys in the bay. Alongside the tender were the two support barges, which had been unloaded from the amphibious ship. The nets guarded the entrance to the harbor.

On the mainland a few miles from the town of Cienfuegos, there had arisen a new dock, a fuel storage depot and the early stages of a major communications facility, undoubtedly the radio link to Moscow, guarded by anti-aircraft missiles and surveillance radar. What we saw, in short, had all the earmarks of a permanent Soviet naval base.

I STRONGLY FAVORED facing the challenge immediately lest the Soviets misunderstand our permissiveness and escalate their involvement to a point where only a major crisis could remove the base. The Soviets knew that we were photographing Cienfuegos almost daily; if we did nothing they had to assume that we were acquiescing. If we then suddenly confronted them, they might have run out of maneuvering room for a retreat; the consequent crisis might well be observe its part of the understanding."

Orally, Dobrynin added that while he could not make an agreement that Soviet submarines would never call at Cuban ports, he was prepared on behalf of his government to affirm that ballistic missile submarines would never call there in an operational capacity. I replied that we should make sure that the two governments understood the word "base" in the same manner.

THE SOVIETS' REPLY was clearly positive in tone, committing them not to establish a naval base in Cuba—even if the definition was as yet vague—and Soviet actions were consistent with it.

Construction of port facilities ceased, the tender was moved to a pier rather than continue to serve as a floating repair facility, and the next day two ships of the flotilla departed.

Rather than a dramatic confrontation on the order of the 1962 missile crisis, we considered that quiet diplomacy was best suited to giving the USSR an opportunity to withdraw sharpened by their belief that they had been set up for humiliation.

The fact that so much of the equipment was seaborne indicated to me, however, that the Soviets had left themselves a way out. If challenged, they would bristle; they might bargain; but if permitted to do so they would withdraw. It was not easy to convince the president of this strategy; indeed, I never really did.

I told the president that we had no choice except to face the Soviets down, but we should do so in a manner that gave them a way out.

I SUMMONED DOBRYNIN under the pretext of giving him an answer to his queries about a summit meeting. My words were carefully chosen to suggest that the United States had not yet made up its minds about the precise nature of Soviet activities in Cienfuegos. I wanted him to understand that this was said only to give his government a graceful opportunity to withdraw without a public confrontation.

Dobrynin was a thorough-going professional. The issue now was a test between major powers involving important national interest. He was therefore all business as he sought to determine the extent and the limits of our challenge.

Dobrynin asked whether we were going to start a big press campaign on the issue, obviously calculating how much loss of face would be involved in a retreat. I replied that we had no such intention. The Soviets thus had an opportunity to consider whether to go the route of conciliation or the route of confrontation; we were prepared for either.

On Oct. 5, Dobrynin requested an urgent appointment. The Soviet message he brought began by noting the reaffirmation of the 1962 understanding in the previous exchanges and concluded with a precise commitment that no base was being built in Cuba.

"The Soviet side has not done and is not doing in Cuba now—that includes the area of the Cienfuegos port—anything of the kind that would contradict that mentioned understanding."

The note concluded: "In any case, we would like to reaffirm once more that the Soviet side strictly adheres to its part of the understanding on the Cuban question and will continue to adhere to it in the future on the assumption that the American side, as President Nixon has reaffirmed, will also strictly without humiliation. By great firmness in the early stages of construction, we avoided a major crisis, yet we achieved our objective. Military construction was halted; the anti-aircraft emplacements were dismantled; the communication facility never became operational.

Spalding Pro-Am continues thru Sunday

Stars from the men's and women's professional golf tours will compete head on for equal prize money in the $120,000 Spalding Invitational Pro-Am, Thursday through Saturday, Jan. 3-5 over four Peninsula golf courses.

The tournament, which began Wednesday, Jan. 2, will be played at Old Del Monte, Corral de Tierra and Spyglass Hill golf courses Thursday and Friday. On Saturday, the field will be limited to pros who will compete at Pebble Beach Golf Links for the final round.

Players will tee off from the first and 10th holes at 9:30 a.m. Thursday and Friday; the final round at Pebble Beach will begin at 9, a.m.

Staged to benefit the Monterey Kiwanis Club, a youth-oriented charity, the event is the focus of national attention as proscompete in the first major tournament of the year not on the regular PGA tour.

Tickets for the tournament are $10 for a season pass, $5 for daily tickets the first three days and $8 for Saturday's final round at Pebble Beach. Season passes are available at all Monterey Peninsula golf courses, and at Intersport in Del Monte Center and Monterey Sport Shop, Monterey. Single tickets may be purchased at tournament sites on the day of play.

Among the 78 professional golfers who will compete for a top prize of $22,500 are defending champion Al Geiberger and Dave Stockton, both former PGA stars, Jack Renner, who finished 14th on the money list in 1979 with $182,000, Larry Zeigler, George Archer, Rod Curl, Forrest Fezler, Rod Funseth, Mike Morley, Jerry Hear and Bob Wynn. During the first three days of play the pros are teamed with 234 amateurs.

Amateur sensation Bob Clampett of Carmel Valley has joined the amateur field at the Spalding tournament. A two-time All-American collegiate golfer from Brigham Young University, Clampett was named Amateur Golfer of the Year for 1978. He has won amateur tournaments around the world and was among the three golfers who competed for the championship in the suddendeath playoff at the 1979 Spalding Pro-Am.

Last year in an unprecedented move, the Spalding Pro-Am invited members of the LPGA to compete head-to-head with the men. The women will return for the second time in United States golf history and compete through to the final round at Pebble Beach.

Beth Daniel, one of the top players from the LPGA tour, was recently named Rookie of the Year by both the LPGA and Golf Digest magazine and was the winner of the Patty Berg Classic on the regular tour and the World Ladies Championship, an international tournament played in Japan.

With the exception of Nancy Lopez-Melton, no rookie has had the impact that Daniel did on the tour in recent years. Prior to turning professional, she became one of the few women invited to play as an amateur in the Bing Crosby National Pro-Am Championship.

For awhile, defending champion Geiberger, one of the few golfers to win more than $1 million during his career, thought he would be unable to defend his title. In September, the 42-year-old pro underwent knee surgery but managed to come back and win the Colonial Invitational this year. Last year during a three-way playoff he sank a 25-foot birdie putt on the first sudden-death hole to clinch the title.

Geiberger will have stiff competition from Funseth, the only two-tine winner of the Spalding Pro-Am, and Fezler, also a former Spalding winner.

Truly a community center

By RICHARD TYLER
Director, Sunset Community and Cultural Affairs

FIFTEEN YEARS AGO, the Sunset School was bought by the city of Carmel to serve as a community and cultural center. During these 15 years the entire nation became more aware of the needs and commitment to the arts.

The National Endowment for the Arts, an independent agency of the federal government, was created in 1965 to encourage and assist the nation's cultural resources. Throughout the country, states and cities set up arts councils to advise and activate cultural organizations in their areas. Recreational and cultural activities have become a part of our everyday lives.

The enjoyment which we garner from the center makes our lives richer and more meaningful. Direct assistance from business and foundations helps to promote an excellence in cultural programming and offsets costs which are not covered by subsidies. The Sunset Community and Cultural Center has flourished during this time. In 15 years, it has become a vital and viable part of the community.

When I arrived three years ago, the center was very active with symphony, chamber music, music society presentations, a guitar festival, festival of dance and various film programming. The musical organizations performing in the center were well established. They have an excellent audience which has been built up over the years and will hopefully continue to grow.

THE CITY-SPONSORED events also continue to improve in attendance. This past year some new events and some increased performances were added to the calendar and a few firsts made their appearance in the programming of the center.

Last year we presented several local musicians in recitals; the Children's Experimental Theater had a benefit performance on the outdoor stage at the Forest Theater of Hansel and Gretal; Forest Theater was also the setting for the Middle School's production of Gilbert and Sullivan's H.M.S. Pinafore. The Carmel Bach Festival increased their performances this year by adding an extra weekend; Carmel High School and Seaside High School combined forces to present a dance recital in an afternoon performance attended by students and senior citizens; and the Hidden Valley Music Seminars gave preview performances of their opera season. Two areas that needed special attention showed improvement this past year—community involvement and theater activity. In addition, the program to renovate the building has been attacked with vigor.

Sunset Community and Cultural Center is just that—a community and cultural center. The building has great possibilities. Wisely used, there is room to encourage group participation in classes, workshops and study sessions. We have not realized the full potential of the galleries; the theater, while less than superior for some performances, has an aura which makes any event there special. There is room to expand the current programs and there are areas yet to be remodeled for better public use.

The Christmas in Carmel celebration is a good example of what can be accomplished when an entire community chooses to be involved. There is a need for a constant exchange of ideas and experience in a community; all of which can join in activities in the publicly owned facility, Sunset Center.

We are trying to encourage classes for which there is a public demand. This past year we had classes in Legal Aspects of Real Estate, Law for the Layman, Real Estate—Appraisal I, Self-Hypnosis, Yoga and Ballroom Dancing. Art classes, classes in ceramics, and sculpture are always available and special workshops in various aspects of art are offered regularly. Such programs as these are what I would like to see continue to grow at the center.

Space for public interest topics was provided more often this year and I think that this will continue as we have the need for public forums. Annexation meetings, reclamation project proposals, police training academies, rabies clinics, Coastal Commission workshops, forestry seminars, sanitary district meetings and ecology workshops met at the center in this period. Such general interest subjects are the responsibility of the city and we are constantly on the alert to see that space and schedules are made available for such public meetings and forums.

there seems to be no urgent need for one. There are many fine theater organizations on the Peninsula now. However, the ability to provide the community with a more constant schedule of performances is a goal towards which we should strive. At the present time there is only the Forest Theater Guild, but it performs two months of the year with a limited repertory. It seems to me than an active community such as Carmel with its many cultural organizations should be able to nurture and support a community theater that would perform for the most part of a season.

The city has taken the lead to reactivate original drama in the area by offering a competition for a new play. The second annual playwriting competition had double the submissions of the first one and the winning play was performed for two weekends in the Sunset Theater. This activity affords a new playwright the opportunity of recognition as well as participation in his play's production. It brings to the community new material for the theater and encourages local participation. This constant discovery is often the birth of a new theater.

The city is constantly receiving generous donations of money and art that is given for the beautification of Sunset Center. This past year a room was renovated by the Babcock family and funds were provided for visual arts equipment. A major part of Mrs. Babcock's art collection was donated to the center and is on view in various rooms of the center. Mrs. Dorothy Chapman provided funds for a mural outside the Leonard Carpenter Hall which was executed by the popular local cartoonist, Bill Bates. A new heating system, new roof and sprinkling system have been provided by the city. Work has been started in the theater with new carpeting and provisions being made for lighting the aisles. Monies are available for the renovation of the terrace and the city has approved this project for completion this year.

This old building needs such loving care. There is a great deal of potential which has yet to be realized. The building plays host to over 100,000 people each year. There are over 700 presentations, 1,000 classes and 1,100 scheduled meetings, public services and symposiums available in a building which was not designed as a cultural center but serves admirably as one. Surely the residents look upon this special building with pride for in many communities throughout the country a cultural center is still a dream.

What would I wish for the center this year? Only more of what it already offers ... a place where people can enrich their lives, an opportunity to be involved or participate as an audience, and the constant support of all the citizens of this special place called Carmel.

Christmas and classical music ... a curious relationship

By SCOTT MacCLELLAND

SINCE THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH gave both seed and sapling growth to what would become the classical music tradition of Western Europe it would follow, by the implications of tradition, that Christmas would offer an annual opportunity for thriving mutual celebration.

In fact, Christmas has spawned astonishingly few musical masterpieces. To wonder why this is so is to wonder, at last, what is the real character of Christmas.

While the birth of the Christ child is celebrated as the second most important event in Christendom it remains, simply, the birth of a child, a scene of pastoral tenderness and of universal optimism.

How does a mature artist who has undoubtedly learned the rules of survival recapture pastoral tenderness? And does it make more sense to treat the subject in a pastoral and tender manner or with flamboyance and vigor? The actual record favors both the pastoral and the minor composer.

THE LARGE BODY of well-known Christmas music, mostly in the form of carols or anthems, is by composers whose names are all but unknown. Who composed, for example, In dulci jubilo, Adeste fidelis, Oh Little Town of Bethlehem, Hark, the Herald Angels Sing, Silent Night? Who, for that matter, composed The Star Spangled Banner? The names can be discovered, if not always authenticated, and these songs are often the only surviving representatives of composers whose outputs were vast. The acclaimed classical masters, by contrast, rarely, if ever, are known for their Christmas-inspired works.

The supreme exception is Handel's Messiah, which is only partly concerned with Christmas. Bach's Christmas Oratorio, by contrast, is conceived on a significantly smaller scale. Not only are its arias and choruses not among Bach's most inspired, but the whole of the work, some six cantatas, was designed to be heard over a period of several weeks, instead of all at once.

Further back in music history one finds an increasing number of fine Christmas settings, but even seasoned concertgoers will be hard pressed to recall the charming nativity and epiphany compositions of Buxtehude, Kuhnau, Schuetz and Praetorius.

AND WHAT SINCE MESSIAH? More than a century passed before Berlioz created his l'Enfance du Christ, and this work, composed in 1854 is, in retrospect, virtually the only major-quality Christmas piece for another 80 years.

It is only in our own time, with Christmas choral works by Poulence, Britten's Ceremony of Carols and Menotti's Amahl and the Night Visitors — all much more personal and "charming" — that the literature has been suitably enhanced, to say less than enough about Olivier Messiaen's naive but sophisticated devotions.

To be sure, there are numerous Christmas compositions of imposing dimensions — Rheinberger's Star of Bethlehem ... Vaughan-Williams' Hodie ... Casals' El Pessebre — whose importance is overwhelmed by their inflation.

THE OLDEST CHRISTMAS CAROL which is still known and popular is In dulci jubile, not in its antique version but in the 16th century harmonization by Michael Praetorius. Nearly as ancient is Praetorius' setting of Es ist ein Ros'entsprungen. There is a vast body of Christmas music before the 16th century which has great charm and beauty. And there are the music dramas that go back as far as the 11th century and often are Christmas inspired, complete with Jesuses, Marys, Herods and the rest

In the latter half of the 17th century the "pastoral" concerto attained high popularity during Italy's "Golden Age of Strings." Pastoral movements, usually in the lilting 6/8 rhythm of what came to be called siciliano figured prominently in concertos by Corelli, Torelli, Manfredini and others. The "rocking" motion of 6/8 was later popular as 12/8 in the stately introductions to many French overtures. Well known in Messiah is the Pastoral Symphony in 12/8 time.

The finest example of the pastoral movement appears at the conclusion of Corelli's best known string concerto, the Opus 6, No. 8 in G Minor "Christmas Eve." So associated with Christmas did that expanded 3/4 rhythm become that subsequent composers were often inhibited, lest their works take on a Christmas association.

BUT WHAT OF the character of Christmas, a holy day that has often been described as among the "most human" of Christian celebations? Why has there been such a paucity of high-quality Christmas music during two centuries of incredible musical literature?

The answer obviously lies in the great music literature itself. Operas, symphonies, concertos and sonatas fascinated both artist and public more. Among the great liturgical settings are requiems, masses and oratorios. These kinds of works potentially all have significantly greater complexity and drama than the Christmas story.

our feelings of tenderness and moments of repose are expressed. But the complexification of human personality, in Western culture, occurs outside of the home — in social affairs, in games, risks, successes and failures. Music of complexity, drama and abstraction, of triumph and tragedy will always address the human condition with more comprehension and more day-to-day relevance.

You can make your reservations now for Vintage '80 California Wine Festival

By ROBERT LAWRENCE BALZER '

BELIEVE IT OR NOT, it's not too early right now to make gnawing grape-challenge from Burgundy: Back to Pinot Noir. Monterey.

Reservation checks were returned to disappointed guests was true for California wineries hoping to participate.

This year 1,100 guests were on hand for the four-day event, coming from Maine to Alabama, England, France, Australia, Canada and Germany, to meet the winemakers and taste the wines of 79 California wineries, listen to 27 renowned speakers and dine in dozens of the marvelous restaurants "on the beautiful Monterey Peninsula." It remains the most enjoyable and educational wine celebration in America.

Dates for this nonprofit festival, sponsored by the Monterey Peninsula Hotel and Restaurant Assn., for 1980 have already been announced: Nov. 30-Dec. 3. You may call (408) 64-WINES, or write P.O. Box WINE, Carmel, Calif. 93921.

IT WAS PARTICULARLY significant that this year 30 percent of the attendees were restaurateurs. Seminar speaker Eunice Fried dramatically and statistically documented why even French restaurants in New York were beginning, somewhat reluctantly, to add California wines to their wine lists—quality, price and customer demand. Steven Spurrier and Libby Dunton from Paris told of the wine awakening to the California challenge in the intensely chauvinistic Gallic wine marketplace.

Wine Institute President John de Luca and the distinguished Prof. Maynard Amerine revealed the riptides of the American wine scene. While the growth patterns are encouraging, Neo-Prohibitionists are at work raising stumbling blocks to thwart the peaceful interstate commerce and consumption of wines in America.

If you'd like to join the growing number of wine lovers in resistance to all these anonymous "roadblocks" to the civilized enjoyment of our indigenous heritage of fine wines from our good winemakers, just send $1 to: Americans for Wine, Temporary Administration, c/o Wine Institute, 165 Post St., San Francisco, Calif. 94108, with your name, occupation, plus your connections and persuasions in this good cause.

AMERICA'S MOST distinguished winemaster and enologist, Andre Tchelistcheff, was the last of the scheduled seminar speakers, programmed to talk about that thorny and reservations for Vintage '80 of the California Wine Festival in In connoisseur circles, it is well known that Tchelistcheff produced, in 1946 at Beaulieu Vineyards, a California Pinot Noir from Napa Valley vines that was not only recognized months before the December festival opening, and the same early as a flawless 20/20 varietal but, even more, as a distinguished wine equal to the finest of the great wines of the "Memory is a winetaster's greatest asset." we've been told. We remember that '46 Pinot Noir as vividly as if we'd tasted it only hours ago. There are only a few bottles in existence today.

When they appear at auction, they fetch four-figure amounts, just like the Chambertins, Romanee-Conti wines of the Domaine, Musigny and Clos de Vougeot which it resembles.

"THAT WINE," HE TOLD his listeners, "was produced from a clone shipped from France at the end of the last century. It was almost 50 years old at that time, yielding less than one-half ton per acre. If you are interested in growing just leaves, and not grapes. I was told ... so it was uprooted, and the same clone used to establish a new vineyard in another Napa Valley location, near the Silverado Trail. Nothing ... from the same clone."

There are, he said, more than 200 clones of Pinot Noir growing in France in Burgundy.

Who is to say which one is "the true clone?" There are many in California. Some have canes which want to grow straight up, others horizontal. Some have little round grapes and grow in small, tight clusters. Others have longer bunches.

Some winemakers keep the wine on the skins until they have a wine that's inky black; others briefly, in a methodology which makes a translucent ruby wine. All true. We've been in the cellars where each kind of wine has been fermenting, waited years and tasted the results. They are all different

IN REFLECTION UPON Tchelistcheff's intensive coverage of the subject, another direction in the confrontation of the problem of Pinot Noir in California seems to emerge.

It does not lie in either the failure of our viticulture, clonal selection or vinification but in a definition of the consumers' image of what fine burgundy should be. Chambertin is not like Monthelie, one of the most classic of fine Pinot Noirs of the

Cote d'Or, and greatly to our taste. La Tache is not like

Among our California winemakers of the contemporary scene, we have, beyond Beaulieu Vineyards and its historical achievements in both 1946 and 1968, spectacularly splendid wines from Pinot Noir from Chalone Vineyards of Monterey County, Sonoma Vineyards from their River East vineyard, Sanford & Benedict of Lompoc, The Firestone Vineyard of the Santa Ynez Valley, the Robert Mondavi Winery of Oakville, in progressive and different vintage editions, the Hoffman Mountain Ranch of Paso Robles, Joseph Swan of Sonoma County, and Ken Burnap's inky-dark but arresting version from the Santa Cruz Mountain Vineyard. None of these is alike. All have been arresting and striking creations from this challenging vinifera.

IT SEEMS WE NEED to define, if possible, the sensory territory. What should be: (1) the color; (2) the bouquet; (3)

Traditionalists will argue passionately about the bouquet, whether it should recall the berryness of the fruit, as in Monthelie, or a pungency losely defined as "smoky" or Chambertin? Color is easier. All the great and classic Burgundies of our experience, the capital "B" meaning French ones, have been translucent ruby, and never darkly deep, and garnet.

The thorn in our side is not our failure to produce fine Pinot Noir from the right clones, but in our concerted ability to define our success.

It recalls the deathbed dialogue between Gertrude Stein and Alice Toklas. "What is the answer?" whispered Ms. Toklas. "What is the question?" murmured the dying, ever-articulate author.

Now is the time strong constitutions make their New Year's resolutions. Here are some (they may deny it) who, we hear, are going to try it.

Miss Van Brower, city clerk, resolves an hour more to work each day at Carmel City Hall and this year not go home at all. Betty Greene has been heard to say she will take up bridge and abandon the bay.

Comstock the builder, declares he is through making plans for odd homes so he's firing George Chew.

John Jordan resolves each day throughout the year at least one new wing to Pine Inn shall appear.

WORK STARTS ON METABOLIC CLINIC

After months of delay brought about by legal complications connected with the will of the late Grace Harris, construction of the Grace Deere Velie Metabolic Clinic on the outskirts of Carmel is starting anew this week and is to be completed within four months.

The announcement was made by Dr. R. Kocher, who will head the clinic and who recently returned from Los Angeles where his petition for an immediate award of Mrs. Harris' $100,000 bequest for construction of the clinic was granted in the probate court.

Approximately $500,000, one-third of the residue of the estate, will be made available for the clinic after April 30.

When built and furnished at a reported cost of $200,000, the clinic is expected to be one of the finest institutions dealing in metabolic research or the study of nutritional disease.

> CHRISTMAS MAIL SETS RECORD IN CARMEL POST OFFICE

The volume of mail handled during the Christmas rush broke every record the Carmel post office has made in the past, according to William Overstreet, postmaster. The peak was reached on the Thursday before Christmas, when 7,000 letters and 50 sacks of parcel-post mail were handled

CARMEL WILL SOON BE NATURALLY GASSED Natural gas will flow in Carmel mains and will be available for service within two months. Construction of a six-inch main from Monterey to Carmel will be started early this week.

A crew of 60 men will install the line, whose route, it is understood, will follow the general alignment of the Monterey-Carmel Highway. Approximately eight weeks will be required to finish.

Natural gas, as compared to manufactured gas, is at once cheaper and more efficient. Officers of PG&E state that only half as much natural gas is used to obtain the same results as artificial gas and that a saving of 50 percent in comparison with manufactured gas costs is effected.

COUNCIL CLAMPS DOWN ON ROOF SIGNS

The City Council passed an interim ordinance prohibiting all signs and advertising displays on or above the eaves or parapets of buildings without a permit and limiting all signs and displays to 16 square feet in size at its meeting. Wednesday night. The ordinance was declared an emergency measure.

The ordinance will allow the council to issue a use permit if "the proposed sign or display will not be detrimental to the character or development of the neighborhood" and will not "otherwise adversely affect the welfare" of the city.

Since the purpose of the ordinance is to put a stop to the rash of signs, some of billboard proportions, that has lately broken out on the roofs and sides of buildings, the likelihood is that the council will do more refusing than granting.

FORCED ENTRY AT P.O. GETS AUTO IN A JAMB

Pedestrian traffic at the post office was augmented shortly before 2 p.m. Saturday by a Buick, driven by a resident, which made a sudden forced entry through one of the front doors.

The freak accident occurred after the driver's foot slipped from the brake pedal to the accelerator. Though the driver and her daughter were uninjured, Elizabeth Chilton of Carmel, who was about to exit from the post office, was hit on the head by a piece of door frame. The post office suffered two smashed doors, banged-up jambs and a few bricks toppled from its outside planting boxes.

Beach House Beautiful

In all of Carmel, there are only 8 houses that directly front the beach with no streets, no heavy foliage, no high dunes to separate them from the surf. This one, about a half block south of Ocean Avenue, has only a charming Oriental garden to interrupt its intimate concourse with the sea.

The approach is off Scenic Drive, a long straight drive that brings you to the angular structure so naturally fitted to its setting. You arrive on the second level, an intricate blending of great living room, elevated dining room, ingeniously designed kitchen and breakfast alcove, smart powder room — all linked to the ocean and its ever changing views through endless floor to ceiling windows.

All is white about you: white walls, off-white carpeting — a perfect contrast for the stretches of white sand just outside and the limitless blue sea and sky. There are touches of gold: the frame around the flush living room fireplace. Crystal: the lovely dining room chandelier. Dark accents: random oak flooring at the entrance, dark window frames, dark railing encircling the corner deck off living and dining rooms. Recessed ceilings in these two rooms, and a luminous ceiling above the kitchen. Touches — thoughtful, memorable touches.

A staircase descends in two flights from the living room past a light well to the lower floor. Here the great master bedroom, with its own fireplace, spans the seaward side and opens to views of Pescadero Point, Stillwater Cove, endless sand and sea, and Point Lobos. Even the master bath, with oversize stall shower, sunken tub and double sinks, looks to the ocean.

Back along a closet-lined corridor are the lovely guest bedroom, a second complete bath, and an irregular-shaped den or play-room, all with ocean views. There's even an outside shower with blue tiled walls to welcome you back from the beach. And an intercom system with stations inside and out.

The house was designed by Paul Davis about 3 years ago. It's spotless, beautiful, restful, carefree, a unique experience. If you love the sea and respect it, you'll be safe here and endlessly entertained. $725,000.
